Could herd immunity keep coronavirus-afflicted aircraft carriers in the fight?

By SETH ROBSON
Stars and Stripes

TOKYO — The Navy should encourage herd immunity for crews on aircraft carriers in the western Pacific, rather than quarantine sailors ashore who need to be ready for action in the South China Sea, a defense expert and former Navy warship captain said Wednesday.

The San Diego-based USS Theodore Roosevelt aircraft carrier, which has been operating in the western Pacific, diverted to Guam last week after sailors aboard tested positive for coronavirus.

Their commander, Capt. Brett Crozier, wrote to Navy leaders Monday asking that sailors be quarantined and isolated ashore. The virus has sickened 150 to 200 sailors on the ship, the San Francisco Chronicle reported, citing a senior officer who is aboard.

Adm. John Aquilino, commander of the U.S. Pacific Fleet, said during a Wednesday morning teleconference that the Navy is working with Guam's governor to find places, including hotels, if possible, to quarantine and isolate the sailors up to 14 days, according to the Pacific Daily News.

Sailors would rotate back to the carrier once they are free of the virus, he said, declining to provide specific numbers of how many will stay on the Theodore Roosevelt, according to the report.

"It's the number that's needed for the ship to remain operational," Aquilino said. Theodore Roosevelt sailors who test positive are being moved off the ship and placed in isolation at Naval Base Guam for

At-home workers buying more shirts, fewer pants

By JACOB BOGAGE
The Washington Post

A few more shelves might be looking bare at Walgreens around the country, or at least a few more bins empty at fulfillment warehouses. Customers are making a run on tops: shirts, blouses, button-downs, polos, you name it. As more people work from home during the coronavirus crisis and video conference becomes business' new lifeblood, pants are suddenly less important. When all a webcam captures is a user's head and torso, employees are buying more shirts, according to Walmart, and not slacks. "Talking about people [using] Zoom, and doing those types of conferencing, we're seeing increased sales in tops, but not bottoms," Dan Bartlett, Walmart's executive vice president of corporate affairs, told Yahoo Finance last week. When workers are thrust into a work-from-home environment, they can sometimes feel internal and external pressure to boost productivity, or at least feel that they're maintaining a sense of office decorum, said fashion psychologist Dawnn Karen, author of the book "Dress Your Best Life." So when workers hop on a video chat with colleagues, they often grab a professional-looking top, even if they're still wearing pajamas or sweatpants out of view. And instead of rifling through drawers or closets, some people end up buying more outfits online. That's where the sales bump is coming from, Karen said.

Thousands of S. Korean employees furloughed

By KIM GAMEL
AND YOO KYONG CHANG
Stars and Stripes

CAMP HUMPHREYS, South Korea — Following months of warnings, the U.S. military put 4,500 South Korean base employees — about half its local workforce — on unpaid leave indefinitely Wednesday after the allies failed to agree on a new defense cost-sharing deal.

The furlough — the first of its kind — was a blow to the alliance and joint military readiness to fight on the divided peninsula, which commanders say already has been jeopardized by restrictions on movement aimed at preventing spread of the coronavirus.

Negotiators have been deadlocked over the United States' demand that South Korea sharply increase its contribution to offset the costs of stationing some 28,500 service members on the divided peninsula as defense against the nuclear-armed North.

U.S. Forces Korea commander Gen. Robert Abrams expressed regret and promised to continue to press both governments to reach a new Special Measures Agreement as soon as possible since the previous deal expired at the end of the year.

"The partial furlough of [South Korean] employees is not what we envisioned or hoped would happen," he said in a videotaped message. "The furlough is in no way a reflection of their performance, dedication or conduct, but rather due to a lack of a burden-sharing agreement making programmed funds unavailable."

"These are our employees, our

co-workers, our teammates, and we consider them family," he added. "And while this is an unfortunate situation, and we will miss them dearly, we will work to minimize the impact on our 'fight tonight' posture despite the strenuous circumstances."

South Korean officials blamed the American side, saying they had offered compromises including a way to isolate the labor issue while continuing to negotiate on other items.

"Our government has suggested a variety of measures, including the execution of a budget to address the wage issue first, based upon the notion that the furlough does help the combined defense posture," said defense ministry spokeswoman Choi Hyun-soo.

She added that the government would push for a special law to grant loans to help the USFK employees who were ordered not to report to work.

"The ministry will continue to work closely with the U.S. Department of Defense and USFK to prevent the current situation from affecting the joint posture," she said.

The Americans had been paying salaries for the first three months of 2020 with programmed funds, but those dried up on Tuesday.

Pong Ha-song, a 60-year-old dining facility employee who has been with USFK for nearly 30 years, said he hopes a deal can be reached soon so he can go back to work.

"President Trump has been holding Korean USFK workers hostage. This is a hard blow for us," he said Wednesday as he joined the Korean Employees' Union in a small protest outside Camp Humphreys, the main U.S. base south of Seoul.

"My family's livelihood is in danger and I'm going to have difficulties putting food on the table," he added. "If the furlough drags on, I think I'm going to have to look for a part-time job or something."

Hopes were raised when South Korean President Moon Jae-in agreed to send coronavirus testing kits to the U.S. during a phone conversation with Trump last week. Three South Korean firms are planning to ship the diagnostic equipment after winning interim approval from the Food and Drug Administration.

On Tuesday, Jeong Eun-bo, South Korea's lead negotiator, said the two sides were close to a deal after seven rounds of talks, most recently in mid-March in Los Angeles, and were continuing close discussions.

The Yonhap News Agency, quoting an unidentified diplomatic source, also reported that the two sides had reached "the stage of putting on the finishing touches" and could announce a deal later Wednesday.

But a Foreign Ministry official, who spoke on condition of anonymity in line with department rules, played down the report and said no official announcement was in the works.

U.S. negotiators have reportedly dropped initial demands for a fivefold increase in funding of nearly $5 billion a year but are still seeking an increase of at least three times the $920 million that South Korea paid last year.

Seoul, meanwhile, is believed to have offered to go as high as 10% more but wants to maintain the framework of the agreement, which covers most of the South Korean workers' salaries as well as other logistical and construction costs.

23 Air Force units will become part of the Space Force

By COREY DICKSTEIN
Stars and Stripes

WASHINGTON — Twenty-three U.S.-based Air Force units focused on space operations will move into the Space Force in the coming months as officials build up the military's newest branch, Pentagon officials announced Tuesday.

The units include about 1,840 positions to transfer from the Air Force's control into the Space Force, said Maj. William Russell, a spokesman for the Space Force. Air Force and Space Force officials hope to complete the transfers of those units in the next three to six months, but they conceded the moves would only occur when conditions for each unit were such that a smooth transition could be guaranteed.

The units identified to move conduct a variety of space-based missions including intelligence collection, space-based weapons research and protecting U.S. space assets, such as critical GPS and communications satellites. Most of the units are located in Colorado, where the bulk of the military's space mission is housed but others are located in Maryland, Ohio, California, Hawaii and New Mexico. None of the units will physically move their location to become part of the Space Force, Russell said.

These are the units that will transfer into the Space Force and their locations:

- 17th Test Squadron, Peterson Air Force Base, Colo.
- 18th Intel Squadron, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio
- 25th Space Range Squadron, Schriever Air Force Base, Colo.
- 328th Weapons Squadron, Nellis Air Force Base, Nev.
- 527th Space Aggressor Squadron, Schriever Air Force Base, Colo.
- 705th Combat Training Squadron Operating Location-Alpha, Schriever Air Force Base, Colo.
- 544th Intelligence, Surveillance and Reconnaissance Group Staff and Detachment 5, Peterson Air Force Base, Colo.
- Detachment 1, U.S. Air Force Warfare Center, Schriever Air Force Base, Ohio
- 533rd Training Squadron,

Vandenberg Air Force Base, Calif.

■ National Security Space Institute, Peterson Air Force Base, Colo.

■ Counter-Space Analysis Squadron, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio

■ Space Analysis Squadron, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio

■ Air Force Operational Test and Evaluation Center Detachment 4, Peterson Air Force Base, Colo.

■ Air Force Safety Center - Space Safety Division, Kirtland Air Force Base, N.M.

Portions of these units will also transfer into the Space Force:

- 16th Air Force/Advanced Programs, Schriever Air Force Base, Colo.
- 7th Intel Squadron, Fort Meade, Md.
- 32nd Intel Squadron, Fort Meade, Md.
- 566th Intel Squadron, Buckley Air Force Base, Colo.
- Air Force Research Lab Mission Execution, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio
- Air Force Research Lab

Space Vehicles Directorate, Kirtland Air Force Base, N.M.

■ Air Force Research Lab Rocket Propulsion Division, Edwards Air Force Base, Calif.

■ Air Force Research Lab Electro-Optical Division, Maui, Hawaii & Kirtland Air Force Base, N.M.

■ Air Force Research Lab Sensors Directorate, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio

The units will join some 16,000 airmen and Air Force civilian workers who had worked for the former Air Force Space Command, which was moved into Space Force control earlier this year. But none of those airmen have officially transferred into the Space Force, which has only one actual member — Gen. John Raymond, the chief of space operations.

For now, airmen serving in units that have or will soon transfer into the Space Force will remain in the Air Force but assigned temporarily to a Space Force mission, while officials complete the process for service members to move from their current service into the Space Force.

Russell said the process should be worked out in the coming months. Soldiers, Marines and sailors in certain space-focused units are expected to be allowed to move into the Space Force in the coming year.

Later this year, airmen will be allowed to volunteer to transfer into the Space Force. Airmen who are assigned to a unit under Space Force control and choose not to move into the new service "will remain in the Air Force and assigned to the Space Force unit until their normal assignment rotation is complete, at which time they will be moved to an assignment within the Air Force," Russell said.

Raymond told reporters last week that he did not expect restricted movement implemented by the Defense Department amidst the coronavirus pandemic to significantly slow the Space Force's growth.

The general said he expected thousands of airmen to transfer officially into his new service by the end of the year.

USAFA moves up graduation after cadet deaths

Stars and Stripes

The Air Force Academy has moved its graduation up by more than a month to mid-April as it continues to fight the coronavirus and grapples with the suspected suicides of two seniors, the superintendent of the academy said in a message to cadets.

"On April 18th, the class of 2020 will receive their diplomas in a ceremony designed by cadets," Lt. Gen. Jay Silveria said in the message, which was posted in academy Facebook groups.

"It will not be the traditional graduation ceremony you have imagined for years, but it can be one-of-a-kind and unique ... like the class of 2020," said Silveria, himself a graduate of the academy.

The decision to move the graduation ceremony forward was taken after two cadets were found dead in their rooms last week in what investigators believe were suicides.

The deaths caused the academy to rethink the strict restrictions imposed on graduating seniors, who have remained on campus since underclassmen were dismissed nearly three weeks ago as part of the academy's efforts to fight the coronavirus.

"We are at war with ... a global pandemic, and that fight is unconventional," Silveria said.

"As a commander in conventional conflicts, I had years of history to call on when making decisions — a playbook we don't have as we battle this pandemic," he said, announcing that graduation was being moved up by nearly six weeks from its original date of May 28.

"We must make unconventional decisions and take what we would consider extreme measures," Silveria said.

The new ceremony, which the graduating class is planning itself, will allow cadets to "celebrate together while ensuring their health and safety by adhering to Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and Department of Defense guidelines" against the coronavirus, a post on a Facebook page for alumni said.

No guests, including family and friends, will be allowed to attend a ceremony in person, but it will be livestreamed, the post said.

The date change came after Air Force Secretary Barbara Barrett, Gen. David Goldfein, the service chief of staff, and Gen. John Raymond, the chief of space operations, visited the academy Monday and spoke with cadets to try to work through some of the issues they've faced during the pandemic, Air Force Academy officials said in a statement.

On Tuesday, some recreational facilities were reopened for cadets, harsh punishment for breaching social distancing rules were waived and more restrictions were lifted, including a ban on leaving campus, several cadets told Stars and Stripes.

US government returns 27 acres of land on Okinawa Marine base back to locals

BY MATTHEW M. BURKE

Stars and Stripes

CAMP FOSTER, Okinawa — The U.S. government returned a small portion of a Marine Corps base to the Okinawa prefectural government Tuesday in what amounts to the last planned land return without preconditions.

The 27-acre parcel includes frontage on the main highway, Route 58, between Camp Foster and Camp Lester. It was the site of the Facilities and Engineering Compound, Japan's Ministry of Defense said in a statement on its website.

The return is the latest piece of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs' 2013 Consolidation Plan for Facilities and Areas in Okinawa, which focuses on land south of Kadena Air Base. Under that plan, the U.S. military has already returned 150 acres from Foster, Camp Kinser and Marine Corps Air Station Futenma.

The plan calls for the return of another 2,400 acres by 2028 or later, including all of Futenma and significant portions of Kinser. Certain conditions must be met before some of that land can be returned, however, like the completion of a new airfield at Camp Schwab in northern Okinawa to replace Futenma.

AFRICOM plans reports after group's allegations of more civilian deaths

BY JOHN VANDIVER
Stars and Stripes

STUTTGART, Germany — U.S. Africa Command said it is assessing a new allegation from a human rights group that two civilians were killed in separate February airstrikes in Somalia, and will begin issuing quarterly reports this month on possible civilian casualties to boost transparency.

"There is no set timeline for the completion of these assessments, as we have a rigorous process and we will not rush, nor cut corners," AFRICOM said in a statement.

On Wednesday, Amnesty International issued a report which said it found evidence that two civilians were killed and three injured in the two airstrikes.

The organization said it interviewed the victims' relatives, community members and associates, and that those killed were not connected to the Al-Shabab terrorist group. The strikes happened Feb. 2 and Feb. 24. At the times, AFRICOM in news releases said that no civilians were harmed in the strikes against militants.

On Tuesday, AFRICOM said that it intends to issue its first quarterly report which will update the public on civilian casualty allegations and assessments, and whether cases are open or closed.

"Since I took command last year, we have been reviewing and revising our (civilian casualty) tracking, assessment and reporting procedures," AFRICOM's Gen. Stephen Townsend said in a statement. "To demonstrate our transparency and commitment to protecting civilians from unnecessary harm, we plan to publicize our initial report by the end of this month, and we will provide quarterly updates thereafter."

In its latest report, Amnesty International identified Nurto

Kusow Omar Abukar, an 18-year-old woman, as a civilian killed in the Feb. 2 strike, which injured her two younger sisters and grandmother.

On Feb. 24, a Hellfire missile from another U.S. airstrike killed 53-year-old Mohamad Salad Mohamad, Amnesty also reported.

Last year, Amnesty issued multiple reports that accused AFRICOM of killing more than a dozen civilians in various strikes in Somalia. So far, AFRICOM has acknowledged killing one civilian in its air campaign against militants in Somalia, where the pace of airstrikes has steadily intensified during the past several years in an effort to neutralize the terrorist group.

AFRICOM has disputed Amnesty's other previous allegations, however.

"Our in-depth post-strike analysis relies on intelligence methods that are not available to non-military organizations, including Amnesty International," AFRICOM said.

New rules keep spouses out of delivery room in Vicenza

BY NANCY MONTGOMERY
Stars and Stripes

VICENZA, Italy — Pregnant Americans living in Vicenza will have to deliver their babies without spouses or other support people present because the local Italian hospital, with restrictive new rules to prevent coronavirus spread, is the only option.

The U.S. Army garrison's birthing center, closed six years ago, can't be reopened any time soon, health center commander Lt. Col. Joe Matthews said at a virtual town hall meeting Tuesday.

The decision at San Bortolo Hospital to exclude partners mirrors many medical facilities in cities with large numbers of coronavirus infections, though two U.S. military hospitals in Europe continue to allow one support person.

However, traveling to those U.S. facilities for obstetric care was likely unworkable because of safety reasons and movement restrictions, said Maj. Ezella Washington, the center's chief medical officer.

Giving birth at less restrictive nearby Italian hospitals in Padova or Verona posed another set of problems, Washington said, including lack of translation services and increasing case numbers of coronavirus there.

Home births are out because few midwives in Italy attend them and the military insurer Tricare doesn't pay for them.

"Right now the only option and the safest option is San Bortolo," Washington said in the meeting.

It's unclear how many women associated with U.S. Army Garrison Italy are pregnant or soon to give birth.

Col. Ken Burgess, commander of the 173rd Airborne Brigade, said recently that he was aware of at least 86 pregnant people associated with his command.

San Bortolo Hospital recently banned almost all visitors as it seeks to minimize transmission of a virus that has killed more Italians than any other nationality.

Other hospitals in global hot spots have also banned support people from attending the births and visiting afterward.

Such rules have prompted outbreaks. After New York City hospitals barred visitors, a protest petition drew more than 600,000 signatures. Within days, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo ordered hospitals to allow one support person to help during labor, delivery and after birth.

The Navy's hospital in Naples also allows one person, it said this week.

"The support person must remain in the patient's room for the entirety of admission (admission to discharge) and cannot be switched to another person once admitted," the policy issued Tuesday said.

Landstuhl Regional Medical Center is also allowing a support person. The hospital used to permit "stork nesting," a program to allow women to give birth there, after Vicenza's birthing center closed. But that policy changed some time ago.

"It is not permissible for pregnant mothers to come to LRMC for stork nesting for the sole reason of having a partner present for delivery," said Gino Mattarona, a spokesman for the Regional Health Command Europe.

Vicenza officials said they were still exploring options and that it was possible that some women with exceptional circumstances might gain approval to give birth elsewhere.

But Antigone Miller, who delivered a baby at San Bortolo a week ago, told the town hall viewers that her experience was a good one, despite initially being "terrified" to learn her husband could not be with her. The nurses were kind and attentive, she said, she had her own room and her baby stayed with her until their release after 48 hours.

"It wasn't the same as having my husband there but I felt safe," Miller said. "I felt very cared for."

Carriers: Former captain says best course of action is to 'ride it out'

their required isolation period, Joint Region Marianas spokesman Lt. Cmdr. Rick Moore told Stars and Stripes in an email Wednesday.

"We are not going to confirm specifics about where USS Theodore Roosevelt Sailors are being quarantined or isolated on Naval Base Guam," he said. "Medical representatives from Naval Base Guam evaluate them daily."

The Navy will continue to work with the government of Guam and the Guam Hotel and Restaurant Association to identify lodging at several hotels for sailors from the warship, he said.

However, Jan van Tol, a former Navy captain who commanded several warships, including the Japan-based USS O'Brien and USS Essex, said it would be a mistake to quarantine most of carrier's crew ashore.

"One needs to maintain a capital ship on deployment ready to fight at any time," van Tol, now a senior fellow at the Center for Strategic and Budgetary Assessments in Washington, told Stars and Stripes via email Wednesday. "We never know when a conflict or crisis might emerge, especially for ships deployed to [the western Pacific] these days, which remains particularly germane given the current tense U.S.-China relations."

U.S. Naval Base Guam increased its health-protection level to Charlie on Tuesday, which indicates a substantial risk of coronavirus. The following day, Guam Gov. Leon Guerrero announced a third coronavirus death on the U.S. island territory, local broadcaster KUAM news reported.

At Yokosuka Naval Base in Japan, at least two sailors aboard the aircraft carrier USS Ronald Reagan have tested positive for the virus, Fox News reported Saturday. The Navy hasn't confirmed the news or released information about any other tests on the carrier, but Yokosuka went into lockdown on Saturday.

If both the Theodore Roosevelt and the Ronald Reagan were unable to fight due to quarantining, the Chinese military might seek to exploit the situation, particularly in the South China Sea, van Tol said.

"We have to consider the perceptions and reactions of outside parties if we elect to take major units out of action," he said.

Crozier, in his letter, argued that removing most of the crew from the ship and isolating them for two weeks, although an extraordinary measure, is a necessary risk.

"It will enable the carrier and air wing to get back underway as quickly as possible while ensuring the health and safety of our Sailors," he wrote.

The coronavirus seems to have quite low lethality for young people, and many don't even realize they've had it, van Tol said, adding that average age of sailors at sea is 19 to 20 years old.

The best course of action would be to "ride it out" by allowing sailors to get sick, recover and develop "herd immunity" as a crew, he said.

Herd immunity involves letting the virus spread through a population in a controlled manner to build a natural form of immunity. It's being done in Sweden, where authorities are allowing the virus to spread slowly while sheltering the elderly and the vulnerable until much of the population becomes naturally immune or a vaccine becomes available.

However, it's been rejected in other places where authorities are concerned about medical systems being overwhelmed. The Australian newspaper reported Wednesday.

Van Tol said both aircraft carriers should stay pier-side in Guam and Japan so that cases with serious symptoms can be moved quickly to hospitals.

The Theodore Roosevelt's captain has a moral duty to protect his crew, Van Tol added.

"However, mission readiness must come first, and for a ship deployed to [the western Pacific], that means remaining manned and ready to fight even if some of the crew are ill," he said.

Another positive test raises USFK total to 14

By KIM GAMEL
Stars and Stripes

SEOUL, South Korea — U.S. Forces Korea confirmed another positive coronavirus case at Camp Humphreys on Wednesday, raising its total to 14, the military said.

Thorough cleaning of affected areas and contact tracing to find others who may have been exposed was underway, USFK said in a tweet. It didn't provide more details, saying additional information would be announced soon.

The latest case comes as Camp Humphreys, the main U.S. military base in South Korea, has been partially locked down since Friday after four other cases were confirmed.

Two soldiers have been infected. The others were four military dependents, four American contractors and four South Korean employees.

Orders barring nonessential movement on Camp Humphreys, a sprawling base with a population of more than 37,000 people, would remain in effect at least through Thursday, USFK has said.

Army Capt. Douglas Linn Hickock was preparing to activate as a physician assistant with the New Jersey National Guard in response to the coronavirus pandemic when the 57-year-old became sick with the virus. He entered a Pennsylvania hospital on March 21 and died Saturday.

Hickock is the first military service member to die from coronavirus, which has infected 673 military members and sent more than 30 to the hospital.

"My brother didn't run away from this virus," said Mary Hickock-Scott, Hickock's younger sister. "He could have. He could have said, 'I'm out.' But he didn't. He ran towards it."

Unable to travel to be together, the Hickock family is spread across the country grieving for a man they say put "God, country and family first."

"He would give the shirt off his back to anyone as long as I can remember," his sister said from her home in Washington state. As a kid, "he would bring home stray pets or friends from school who couldn't afford lunch and have my mom feed them. He was as true as a person could get."

Hickock, a third-generation service member, was born at Norman Air Force Base, Okla., said Shandrea Hickock, his 26-year-old daughter. He and his five siblings were raised mostly in California, where he loved to play baseball and earned his Eagle Scout badge at age 16.

He first moved to the East Coast to attend Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., and became a physician assistant with an emphasis on orthopedic surgery. That work was his passion, Hickock-Scott said.

In 2010, he joined the New Jersey National Guard as a direct commission due to his critical skills, according to Lt. Col. Barbara Brown, spokeswoman for the New Jersey Army National Guard. Hickock had 28 years of medical experience in orthopedic care, acute care, employee health, trauma surgery and medicine.

"That's what he wanted — to continue on with the military because of his family legacy and also wanted to focus on emergency medicine in the military," Shandrea Hickock said from her home in New Jersey.

Last summer, she said her father helped save two soldiers who were injured in a vehicle accident while driving to a National Guard training event.

"I got the opportunity to meet the two soldiers at a barbecue," she said. "It was a very humbling experience to see how heroic my father was to go run down a very steep hill to go get these soldiers and pull them out of the truck."

Her brother, 24-year-old Noah Hickock, is in his final semester at Rutgers University and is applying to the Navy's Officer Commissioning School to continue that legacy, she said.

Hickock lived alone in Bangor, Pa., for the last three years, moving there because he loved the outdoors and the firearm ownership afforded in that state, his daughter said. He was active in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In his younger days, he'd served a two-year mission in Spain and spoke fluent Spanish.

"My dad had a really strong sense of exploration to him always going out and traveling and stuff like that," Shandrea Hickock said. About a month ago — one of their last moments together — she and her father visited Fort Hancock and Sandy Hook Proving Ground National Historic Landmark in New Jersey.

Not only has the coronavirus taken Hickock's life, it's also robbed the family of the opportunity to truly grieve, Shandrea Hickock said. During her father's final days, the hospital would not allow anyone at his bedside for fear of further spreading the virus.

"It's usually a really specific grief process," she said of the rituals that follow losing a relative. "For this, it's just really different."

Pentagon data shows rise in military-related cases

By COREY DICKSTEIN
Stars and Stripes

WASHINGTON — Four U.S. military-affiliated individuals worldwide, including a member of the National Guard, have died of complications related to the coronavirus, according to the Pentagon's latest data released Tuesday.

The latest Defense Department data included a civilian worker's death not previously reported and the death of a New Jersey National Guardsman who died Saturday.

Pentagon officials did not immediately return a request for comment Tuesday on the civilian worker's death.

The first two military-linked deaths announced by military officials occurred in Virginia last month. A defense contractor assigned to the Arlington-based Defense Security Cooperation Agency died March 21, officials said. The spouse of a soldier based at Joint Base Langley-Eustis near Newport News died March 26 after testing positive for the virus.

Stars and Stripes on Monday reported a longtime German employee of the U.S. Army's 21st Theater Sustainment Command in Kaiserslautern died Saturday at local hospital after testing positive for the virus. It was not clear whether that individual was the civilian worker listed as dead in the Pentagon data released Tuesday.

The names of the individuals who died have not been released by the Pentagon, which has cited federal privacy laws. The National Guard soldier who died Saturday was identified in a statement by New Jersey Gov. Phil Murphy as Army Capt. Douglas Linn Hickock, a drilling Guardsman and physician assistant originally from Jackson, N.J.

The data released Tuesday also showed military-linked coronavirus cases continuing to rise steadily, growing to a total of 1,259 cases among service members, their dependents, DOD civilian workers and defense contractors.

Cases among American troops jumped by 82 since Monday morning to a total of 716.

The Pentagon said 42 service members had recovered from the illness by Tuesday.

Thirty-one troops were hospitalized by the virus, according to the data.

Pentagon officials have said in recent weeks that they expected cases would continue to climb in the military community just as in the civilian community.

They have urged commanders to ensure their troops are taking precautions to protect against the virus including frequent hand washing and social distancing.

Most U.S. military bases across the globe have moved the majority of their force to telework and closed post access to only people deemed mission essential.

The Pentagon on Friday ordered local installations to no longer announce publicly data showing the number of coronavirus cases on their posts.

Officials cited operational security, telling reporters that such data could provide adversaries information about military units that have been hit especially hard by the virus, potentially leaving them vulnerable.

The officials pledged to continue to work with local civilian communities to advise them of any threat of the virus from the post.

They also said they would continue to publicly announce coronavirus-linked deaths at the department's installations.

Fort Hood-based soldier's death is 7th for coalition in Iraq this year

By CHAD GARLAND
Stars and Stripes

A 44-year-old soldier from Maryland died in a noncombat incident in northern Iraq this week, the Defense Department said Wednesday.

Sgt. 1st Class John David Randolph Hilty, from Bowie, Md., died Monday in Irbil, the Pentagon said in a statement. COVID-19 was not a suspected cause in Hilty's death, the U.S.-led Operation Inherent Resolve said earlier.

Hilty was a petroleum supply specialist with the 1st Battalion, 227th Aviation Regiment, 1st Air Cavalry Brigade, 1st Cavalry Division, the Fort Hood, Texas-based command said.

U.S. and other foreign troops are mainly based at a compound at the northern Iraqi city's international airport. Earlier this month, the base hosted a memorial for another 1-227 soldier, Spc. Juan M. Mendez Covarrubias, who was one of three coalition troops killed in a March 11 rocket attack on Camp Tajil, north of Baghdad.

Hilty joined the Army as a combat engineer in April 1999

"He was an exceptional leader who will be sorely missed throughout the entire formation," said 1-227th commander Lt. Col. Adam Camarano.

He was due to retire in June, said Adam Sisk, who said the soldier was a high school classmate of his.

"He often told me ... '5 more paychecks! 3 more paychecks and I am outta here!'" Sisk said in a Facebook post. "We had a bunch of beers on the schedule for this summer."

His death marks the seventh fatality for the coalition this year. Six occurred in March alone and all but two were combat-related.

The cause of Hilty's death was under investigation, the Pentagon statement said.

Sisk last communicated with him last week, he said, adding that he found it odd when a funny video he sent him on Monday went unseen.

"He was normally quick to respond with wit," he said.

Hilty had a young son who was one of the "most important people in his life," Sisk said.

In 2009, when Hilty returned from a 12-month Afghanistan deployment — his third — he was quoted in an Army statement while holding his baby boy, then just a year old, after a redeployment ceremony.

"He's huge, he's a little miracle," Hilty said of his son. "We've been married 10 years and we finally got one!"

At the time, Hilty loved the Army life, he said, but returning home from deployment "is the best feeling in the world."

In his post, Sisk thanked his friend and told him to rest easy.

"We will have those Natty Lights soon!" he said.

Russia says it sent supplies to US after chat

By JOHN VANDIVER
Stars and Stripes

STUTTGART, Germany — A Russian aircraft stocked with medical supplies is flying to the U.S. after President Donald Trump accepted an offer of support, the Russian defense and foreign ministries said Wednesday. “The Russian plane with medical masks and medical equipment on board has departed for the United States,” the defense ministry told Russia’s Tass news agency.

It wasn’t clear where the plane was headed in the U.S., but it was expected to arrive Wednesday. The Russian Foreign Ministry said the flight came after talks between Russian President Vladimir Putin and Trump earlier in the week.

The White House had not yet commented on the talks or the aid delivery early Wednesday.

A large Antonov An-124 Russian cargo plane was dispatched to “help fight ‘COVID19 pandemic, save lives of American citizens,” the foreign ministry said on Twitter.

Since the coronavirus outbreak, Russia has touted its aid efforts in countries hard hit by the virus, such as Italy, where Moscow recently sent medics and supplies.

The efforts have been met with

Ben Hodges

appreciation by some but skepticism from some Russia hawks, who consider the moves part of a broader disinformation campaign to undermine the West and NATO.

Ben Hodges, the former commander of U.S. Army Europe, was leery when pictures of the aircraft filled with boxes began circulating on social media Wednesday.

“I’m skeptical of this report ... no Loadmaster in the world would load like that,” Hodges said on Twitter, taking issue with how the cargo was piled into the Russian aircraft.

“But it’s a gift TO the Kremlin, not FROM it, if it is true,” Hodges said.

Like Russia, China — where the virus originated — also has sought out opportunities for public relations wins, even though it was slow to report the virus’ initial outbreak in Wuhan, analysts said.

“Beijing is aggressively engaged in a propaganda campaign to characterize its response to COVID-19 as decisive and representative of a superior system, while calling the response of Western democracies like the United States ‘sloppy,’” wrote John Lee, a senior fellow at the Hudson Institute think tank, in an analysis of Chinese information operations.

Sometimes, however, China’s efforts backfire. Last week, Spain was forced to reject 58,000 Chinese test kits because they were inaccurate at detecting the virus.

Navy families in Naples ‘Get Down Tonight’ with the Giant Voice

By ANN PINSON
Stars and Stripes

Landon Schoenborn, a kindergarten who lives at Naval Support Activity Naples in Italy, counts down to Wednesdays and Fridays every week. Those evenings, he gets to be part of a socially distanced balcony sing-along with his neighbors.

“It’s a chance to hang over the rail and shout hellos to their best friends and neighbors in our building who they haven’t played with in so long,” said Tiffany Schoenborn, mom to Landon and his 3-year-old sister Emelia. “Being stuck in our house, missing out on play dates, parties, school with friends and beloved teachers, and being restricted to our patios for their only outside play space, isn’t the best.

“But I hope that, having and participating in things like Operation Fun/GDT (Get Down Tonight), this can be a time they’ll look back on and remember fondly despite the circumstances.”

Operation Fun/GDT (Get Down Tonight) features music played over the base’s loudspeakers, known as the Giant Voice, at 6 p.m. two nights a week, as residents get a chance to wave hellos and bob along. Italy has been hit particularly hard by the coronavirus pandemic, and the program was designed to give those on base, whose movement is limited under the country’s sweeping coronavirus restrictions, a chance for a sense of community.

NSA Naples Commanding Officer Capt. Todd Abrahamson came up with the idea for the event, and residents get to vote for the songs they want played via options on the base’s Facebook page. Voting is a hot topic for the Cockerham family, who live on base.

“Every Wednesday and Friday, I’ll tell them the song choices and we choose which to vote for then we anxiously wait for 1800 to roll around,” said Kayla Cockerham, mom to 8-year-old son Jayden; daughter Brylee, who just turned 8, and 2-year-old Jeff.

“My daughter is the one who helps me remember and be on top of us going out on the patio close to 1800. We try to make the most of it and dance around and sing along.”

Her 2-year-old was particularly thrilled when “Baby Shark” made the playlist, she said. Each installment features two songs around a theme. For example, a classic rock night included Queen’s “We Will Rock You” and Journey’s “Don’t Stop Believin’.”

Grace Bordt, a base resident, said her 8-year-old daughter Faith made tissue-paper pom-poms to wave during the songs. Her 10-year-old likes voting for selections online but needs encouragement to get out the door to dance. Not so much for Mom.

“It’s so fun for me to dance around holding my 10-month-old, she seems a little overwhelmed by how loud it is but eventually giggles,” Grace Bordt said. “It’s a nice way to break up our time spent inside. Most times we forget it’s happening so then it seems like a surprise every time the music comes on.”

Listening to music over a loud-speaker might not be a priority if just adults were home, Tiffany Schoenborn says, but it’s a must-do with the youngsters.

“It seems kinda silly and the echoey loudspeaker quality isn’t the greatest, but no matter the weather we’re out there with our kids because they love it,” she said.

Volunteers flood NY to help as death toll surges

Associated Press

NEW YORK — New York authorities rushed to bring in an army of medical volunteers Wednesday as the statewide death toll from the coronavirus surged past 1,900 and the wail of ambulances in the otherwise eerily quiet streets of the big city became the heartbreaking sound of the crisis.

As hot spots flared around the country in places like New Orleans, Detroit and Southern California, New York City was the hardest hit of them all, accounting for the majority of the state's deaths, with bodies loaded onto refrigerated morgue trucks by gurney and forklift outside overwhelmed hospitals, in some cases in full view of passing motorists. And the worst is yet to come.

"How does it end? And people want answers," New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo said. "I want answers. The answer is nobody knows for sure."

Across the U.S., Americans braced for what President Donald Trump warned could be "one of the roughest two or three weeks we've ever had in our country." The White House projected 100,000 to 240,000 deaths in the U.S. before the outbreak is over.

Meanwhile, European nations facing extraordinary demand for hospital intensive-care beds are putting up makeshift hospitals, unsure whether they will find enough healthy medical staff to run them. London is just days from unveiling a 4,000-bed temporary hospital built in a huge convention center to take non-critical patients so that British hospitals can stay ahead of an expected surge.

In a remarkable turnaround, rich economies where virus cases have exploded are welcoming help from less wealthy ones. Russia sent medical equipment and masks to the U.S. Cuba sent doctors to France. Turkey dispatched masks, hazmat suits, goggles and disinfectants to Italy and Spain.

Worldwide, about 900,000 people have been infected and over 44,000 have died, according to a tally kept by Johns Hopkins University, though the real figures are believed to be much higher because of testing shortages, differences in counting the dead and large numbers of mild cases that have gone unreported.

The U.S. recorded over 190,000 infections and more than 4,100 deaths.

In New York, at least 78,000 people have volunteered as medical reinforcements, according to state officials. The group includes recent retirees who are willing to go back to work, health care professionals who can take a break from their regular jobs and people between gigs.

Few have made it into the field yet, as authorities yet to come and figure out how to use them, but hospitals are expected to begin bringing them in later this week.

Health care workers who have hit the ground already, many brought in by staffing agencies, have discovered a hospital system becoming overwhelmed.

"I have never seen so many human beings in an ER at one time in my entire life," said Liz Schaffer, a nurse from St. Paul, Minn., who had her first shift Tuesday at Mount Sinai Hospital. "Shoulder to shoulder. It is a sight I never thought I would see. Patients are dying every day. Every single day."

With New York on near-lockdown, the usually busy city streets are so empty that a single siren, to some, is no longer the easily ignored urban background noise.

"After 9/11, I remember we actually wanted to hear the sound of ambulances on our quiet streets because that meant there were survivors, but we didn't hear those sounds, and it was heart-breaking," said Meg Gifford, 61, a former Wall Street worker who lives on Manhattan's Upper East Side. "Today, I hear an ambulance on my strangely quiet street and my heart breaks, too."

The region rushed to set up extra hospital capacity at the mammoth Javits Convention Center, on a Navy hospital ship and in the indoor tennis center that hosts the U.S. Open.

In Southern California, officials reported that more than 50 residents of a nursing home east of Los Angeles have been infected and two have died. Cedar Mountain Post Acute Rehabilitation in Yuccaipa has been told to assume that all of its patients have the virus, health authorities said.

Even as the virus has slowed its growth in overwhelmed Italy and in China, where it first emerged, hospitals in Spain and France are reaching their breaking points, and the U.S. and Britain are bracing for waves of desperately ill people.

"It feels like we are in a Third World country. We don't have enough masks, enough protective equipment, and by the end of the week we might be in need of more medication too," said Paris emergency worker Christophe Prudhomme.

Spain, which hit a record Wednesday of 864 deaths in one day, has boosted its hospital beds by 20%. Hotspots in Madrid and Catalonia have almost tripled their ICU capacity. Dozens of hotels across Spain have been turned into recovery rooms, and authorities are building field hospitals in sports centers, libraries and exhibition halls.

In Italy, with over 13,100 dead so far, the most of any country, morgues overflowed with bodies, caskets piled up in churches and doctors were forced to decide which desperately ill patients would get a breathing machine.

The pressure is easing on hard-hit Italian cities like Bergamo and Brescia as the rate of new infections slows. Yet many Italians are still dying at home or in nursing homes because hospitals are overwhelmed and cannot get ventilators.

The strain facing some of the world's best health care systems has been aggravated by hospital budget cuts over the past decade in Italy, Spain, France and Britain. They relied in medical students, retired doctors and even laid-off flight attendants with first aid certification to help fight the virus, although all need re-training.

The medical staffing shortage has been exacerbated by the high numbers of infected personnel. In Italy alone, nearly 10,000 medical workers have been infected and more than 60 doctors have died.

China, where the outbreak began late last year, on Wednesday reported just 36 new COVID-19 cases.

White House hesitant to order nationwide stay-at-home order

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Even as he warns of a grim few weeks ahead with tens of thousands of Americans likely killed by the new coronavirus, President Donald Trump is resisting issuing a national stay-at-home order to stem the spread of the disease.

Trump said earlier this week that he and members of his administration have discussed issuing a stay-at-home order but it was "pretty unlikely" for now. Then on Tuesday the White House offered "sobering" new projections that 100,000 to 240,000 Americans will likely succumb to the coronavirus even if current social distancing guidelines are maintained.

Surgeon General Jerome Adams on Wednesday noted in a series of television interviews that the U.S. federalist system leaves much of the authority on how to properly respond to catastrophes to individual state governors and local officials.

"We trust the governors and the mayors to understand their people and to decide whether or not they feel like they can trust the people in their states to make the right decisions," Adams said on ABC's "Good Morning America."

The White House's best-case projection assumes a statewide stay-at-home order, according to a senior administration official familiar with Trump's thinking and speaking on condition of anonymity. Trump, the official said, is a believer in federalism and that it is up to individual governors to set restrictions for their states. The official noted that states are being hit by the virus with varying degrees of severity and they are best able to adapt the policies for their specific situations.

More than 235 million people live in the 33 states where governors have declared statewide shelter-in-place orders or have recommended that residents stay home.

In other states — places like Texas, Florida and Pennsylvania, among others — governors have resisted state-level decisions, but some localities have declared residents should stay at home. Those types of local orders cover Houston, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Orlando and St. Louis, along with dozens of other counties and cities.

Still, Trump — who has conducted long, near-daily briefings on his administration's response to the virus outbreak over the last three weeks — has been reluctant so far to use his bulky pulpit to urge governors to issue orders that would help effectively create a national quarantine.

The deference has come even as his administration has issued guidelines that have urged Americans to work from home if possible, cancel on-site learning at schools, and avoid large gatherings.

Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis, a Republican, said Tuesday that Trump's task force has not recommended he issue a state-wide quarantine order.

"If they do, obviously that would be something that carries a lot of weight with me," said DeSantis, a Trump ally who leads one of the largest states yet to issue state-wide orders.

Rep. Donna Shalala, a Florida Democrat, said in an interview Wednesday that Trump's response has been "fragmented, weak and uneven." She called on him to press governors for a unified approach to help stem the spread of the disease.

Coast Guard: Cruise ships must keep ill onboard

By FREIDA FRISARO
AND ADRIANA GOMEZ LICON
Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — The U.S. Coast Guard has directed all cruise ships to prepare to treat any sick passengers and crew on board while being sequestered “indefinitely” offshore during the coronavirus pandemic.

The new rules require daily updates on each ship’s coronavirus caseload for vessels in U.S. waters, and come with a stiff warning: “Any foreign-flagged vessels ‘that loiter beyond U.S. territorial seas’ should try first to medically evacuate the very sick to those countries instead.”

Many of South Florida’s cruise ships are registered in the Bahamas, where hospital capacity is limited and people are still recovering from last year’s Hurricane Dorian.

The rules, which apply to any vessel carrying more than 50 people, were issued in a March 29 safety bulletin signed by Coast Guard Rear Admiral E.C. Jones, whose district includes Florida, Georgia, South Carolina and Puerto Rico.

Dozens of cruise ships are either lined up at Port Miami and Port Everglades or waiting offshore due to the coronavirus pandemic. Most have only crew aboard, but Carnival Corp., which owns nine cruise lines with a total of 105 ships, notified the SEC Tuesday that it has more than 6,000 passengers still at sea, on three ships that will soon arrive in Port Civitavecchia, Italy, and Southampton, England, as well as Fort Lauderdale.

Federal, state and local officials have been negotiating over whether Carnival’s Holland America cruise ships, the Zaandam and Rotterdam, would be allowed to dock at Port Everglades this week. But the company’s Coral Princess is coming, too, with what that ship’s medical center called a higher than normal number of people with flu-like symptoms.

Two of four deaths on the Zaandam were blamed on COVID-19 and nine people have tested positive for the novel coronavirus, the company said. At least 190 more reported symptoms. More than 300 Americans are on the Zaandam and Rotterdam.

Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis said Tuesday that the state’s health-care system is stretched too thin to take on the Zaandam’s coronavirus caseload. “Just to drop people off at the place where we’re having the highest number of cases right now just doesn’t make a whole lot of sense,” DeSantis said.

President Donald Trump said later that he would speak with the fellow Republican. “They’re dying on the ship,” Trump said.

WILFREDO LEE/AP

Cruise ships are docked at Port Miami on Tuesday. The U.S. Coast Guard has directed all cruise ships to prepare to treat any sick passengers and crew on board while being sequestered.

“I’m going to do what’s right. Not only for us, but for humanity.”

Passengers expressed their frustrations to The Associated Press on Wednesday. Andrea Anderson, stuck with her husband, Robb, on the Zaandam, coughed her way through a phone interview. Asked what she would say to Florida’s governor, she said,

“How would he feel if his mother was on this ship? Would he still be saying, ‘no they can’t dock?’”

Under normal conditions, when a passenger or crew member become too ill for the ship’s medical team to care for, they call the Coast Guard to provide a medical evacuation to an onshore hospital. Under the new rules, sick passengers would be sequestered indefinitely on board.

For most people, the virus causes mild or moderate symptoms, such as fever and cough, that clear up in two to three weeks. For some, especially older adults and people with existing health problems, it can cause more severe illness.

VA transfers veterans from New Orleans to Mississippi

By NIKKI WENTLING
Stars and Stripes

WASHINGTON — Veterans are being transferred from the Department of Veterans Affairs hospital in New Orleans to facilities in Mississippi as coronavirus cases in southeast Louisiana continue to grow.

The New Orleans VA Medical Center had tested 258 positive cases of the virus Tuesday, more than triple the number reported by the New York Harbor Health-care System, which had the next-largest number of cases. New York Harbor serves Manhattan and Brooklyn and reported 72 cases Tuesday.

Of the 258 patients who tested positive in New Orleans, 32 were admitted to the hospital. Nine veterans died at the hospital in a two-day span last week, the VA reported. They were veterans in their 60s, 70s and 80s.

Because of the concentration of cases in New Orleans, the facility decided to pre-emptively transfer some patients to the Gulf Coast Veterans Health Care System in Biloxi, Miss., and the G.V. (Sonny) Montgomery VA Medical Center in Jackson, Miss., said Phil Walls, a spokesman for the New Orleans hospital.

The Biloxi hospital, about 90 miles from New Orleans, had reported no coronavirus cases as of Tuesday. Three veterans had tested positive in Jackson, which is about 200 miles away.

The patients being transferred do not have coronavirus and are not under intensive care.

“These moves will ensure the veterans medical center in New Orleans maintains enough capacity to accommodate existing and future COVID-19 patients,” Walls said.

Louisiana has experienced a sharp increase in coronavirus cases. The state reported more than 5,000 positive cases Tuesday and 239 deaths. Gov. John Bel Edwards extended a stay-at-home order for the state through April 30.

Before the first case was diagnosed at the New Orleans VA Medical Center, hospital leadership established a command center to coordinate the response across southeast Louisiana, Walls said. The facility also established a negative airflow ward for patients with coronavirus in order to prevent contamination from escaping.

As with VA facilities nationwide, the New Orleans hospital prohibited visitors, canceled elective surgeries and is screening patients and employees who enter the facility.

Walls said he couldn’t speculate as to why the hospital had reported more positive cases than other VA locations.

The VA reported 1,347 positive cases across the country Tuesday. Of those, 313 patients had been admitted to VA hospitals.

Forty-one veterans had died — an increase of 14 from Monday. The newly reported deaths were in New Orleans, the New York boroughs of the Bronx and Brooklyn; Indianapolis; San Francisco; Wichita, Kan.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Minneapolis; and Madison, Wis. The veterans ranged in age from their 50s to their 80s.

The VA operates 172 medical centers and treats more than 9 million veterans, many of whom are thought to be at higher risk for the virus because of their age and underlying health conditions.

VA Secretary Robert Wilkie said this week he sent mobile units to New Orleans, as well as New York City, San Francisco and Los Angeles. The units provide counseling to veterans and help them coordinate their health care.

Ohio woman lost 3 family members, urges staying home

Associated Press

COLUMBUS — An Ohio woman whose brother, mother and father died from the coronavirus pleaded for people to stay at home and follow social distancing guidelines, while President Donald Trump issued a disaster declaration for Ohio and ordered federal help for local recovery efforts. A GoFundMe page has been created to support the family.

The Health Department said that it has received Ohio's allotment of personal protective equipment from the national strategic stockpile. That includes more than 100,000 gowns, nearly 500,000 gloves and more than 670,000 masks. But Health Director Dr. Amy Acton said the supplies don't meet the state's needs and urged that supplies be conserved and new items donated.

Puerto Rico

SAN JUAN — Puerto Rico on Wednesday closed its fifth police station in a week, raising concerns about the U.S. territory's ability to respond to the coronavirus pandemic as officers accused the government of exposing one of the largest police departments in a U.S. jurisdiction to COVID-19.

More than 150 officers are under quarantine as dozens await test results on an island that has reported 11 deaths and more than 280 confirmed cases amid a monthlong curfew that has shuttered beaches, parks and nonessential businesses.

"It's not fair that the government is dragging its feet," said Gregorio Matias, vice president of a local police union who demanded more protective equipment. "What do they want? To be left without police officers?"

The first police station to close is located in the popular tourist town of Rincon, where the 42-year-old wife of one officer recently died from COVID-19. Also shuttered are police stations in Aguas Buenas, Caimito, Moca and San German.

Connecticut

HARTFORD — Connecticut Children's Medical Center furloughed 400 workers due to the coronavirus outbreak, which has caused elective and other surgeries to be delayed and the number of overall patients to decline, according to officials with the Hartford-based medical system.

The furloughs are for 60 days and affect about 14% of the system's workforce of 2,800. The Hartford Courant reported. Medical center officials expect all the furloughed employees to return to their jobs, maybe by early June.

Patient volumes have ultimately declined by about half, costing the medical center $7.5 million to $9 million a month, said James Shmerling, president and chief executive officer at Connecticut Children's Medical Center.

The medical center has had about a dozen patients with COVID-19 symptoms, far from the volume at other hospitals. Officials said that they would accept children from other hospitals to help them free beds to treat adults with the coronavirus.

Missouri

CUBA — An eastern Missouri man was charged with making a terrorist threat after he allegedly coughed toward customers and wrote COVID on a cooler at a Dollar Tree store.

John Swaller, 33, of Cuba, was charged Tuesday and was being held on $25,000 bail in the Crawford County jail.

An employee of the store in Cuba called police because the man was intentionally coughing toward customers and had breathed on a cooler before writing COVID on the inside of the cooler, police said.

Swaller's father told The St. Louis Post-Dispatch that his son doesn't have COVID-19. Cuba police Chief Doug Shelton said that investigators don't know if Swaller has the coronavirus, but officers used protective gear while taking him to jail.

Pennsylvania

HARRISBURG — Pennsylvania State Police will no longer respond in person to some types of calls as the agency tries to limit troopers' contact with the public and slow the spread of the coronavirus, officials announced Wednesday.

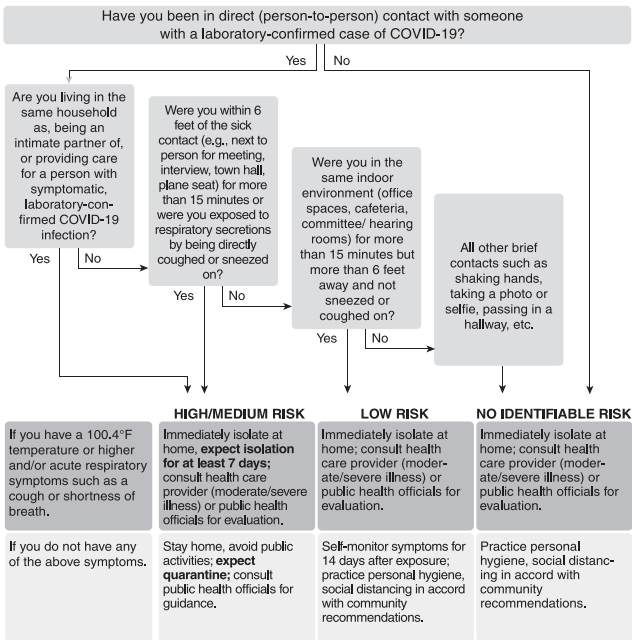

Calls for lost-and-found, littering, identity theft and general requests to speak to a trooper are among the calls that will now be resolved with "limited or no scene response," state police said in a news release. The new policy took effect Wednesday and will be in place until further notice.

State police said that troopers will continue to respond to emergencies.

"To enhance social distancing and keep our personnel and the public safe and healthy, we will begin collecting information via telephone for incidents that do not require an in-person response from a trooper," said Col. Robert Evanchick, the state police commissioner. "This change affects only a limited number of call types, and the public can be confident that the PSP has the personnel, equipment and plans in place to respond to emergencies and other critical incidents."

Weighing risk and response to coronavirus exposure

Members of Congress and their employees, who often interact with the public and work in close quarters, were given the following guidance to evaluate their risk for contracting COVID-19. It was distributed by Congress' in-house medical staff, and is based on guidelines from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Tennessee

SEVIERVILLE — Tennessee officials want tourism businesses to stop soliciting tourists in order to stop the spread of the coronavirus.

The mayors of five cities in Sevier County urged leisure businesses to halt guests through mid-April, the Sevierville Police Department said in a post on Facebook.

WBIR-TV reported that just a few weeks ago, tourists packed Sevier County even after some big attractions closed down and the public was told to practice social distancing.

Texas

AUSTIN — More than two dozen University of Texas students have tested positive for the coronavirus after taking a spring break trip to Mexico, public health officials said.

A group of about 70 people who are in their 20s took a chartered plane to Cabo San Lucas about 10 days ago, the Austin Public Health Department said Tuesday. So far, 28 people in the group have tested positive for COVID-19, the illness linked to the coronavirus, and dozens more are being monitored, the health department said.

The department said that four people with confirmed cases did not have any symptoms.

"The virus often hides in the healthy and is given to those who are at grave risk of being hospitalized or dying," Austin-Travis County Interim Health Authority Dr. Mark Escott said. "While younger people have less risk for complications, they are not immune from severe illness and death from COVID-19."

Vermont

MONTPELIER — State officials in Vermont are ordering large retailers that sell critical items such as food and prescription drugs to stop the in-person sale of nonessential products.

Whenever possible, stores such as Walmart, Target and Costco must stop the sale of nonessential items and require online or telephone ordering, delivery and curbside pickup.

"Large 'big box' retailers generate significant shopping traffic by virtue of their size and the variety of goods offered in a single location," Agency of Commerce and Community Development Secretary Lindsay Kurlle said Tuesday. "This volume of shopping traffic significantly increases the risk of further spread of this dangerous virus to Vermonters and the viability of Vermont's health care system."

The items that cannot be sold in person include clothing, consumer electronics, books, furniture and sporting equipment.

Wisconsin

MADISON — Wisconsin's governor said Wednesday that he will use National Guard soldiers to staff undermanned polling sites in next week's presidential primary.

Local election clerks across the state have said that poll workers are quitting in droves out of fears of contracting the coronavirus during Tuesday's election, which also features a state Supreme Court race and hundreds of local races. More than 100 municipalities have reported that they lack enough people to staff even one polling site.

Democratic Gov. Tony Evers told a federal judge in a filing that he will use members of the Wisconsin Army National Guard to help as poll workers, but that even that move likely won't fill all staffing needs.

The court filing said that the Guard was determining how many soldiers it can make available in each county.

Month of the Military Child

I am from the fallen

By Tuana Turnbull,

4th Grade, Humphreys West Elementary School

I am from campsites,
From ranches and Disney World.
I am from the Gold Star under a hero's watchful eye,
It smelled like the Home of the Brave
I am from the fallen
The warfighter
Whose respect and sacrifice I remember
As my own.

I am from the white and black,
From Nesli and Lyle.
I am from the honorable families
And the gatherings of remembrance,
From "Stay aware!" and "I love you."
I am from the past
With a piano future
And ten songs on those ebony and ivory keys I can play myself.

I'm from the breeze and the pastel,
Bluebonnets and mountains.
From the memories lost to his courage.
To the jar used to keep my family.
Under my bed was a bugle spilling taps.
A star of gold
To drift beneath my dreams.
I am from those moments -
Flashed before my dreams.
I see a leaf falling from the family tree.

Celebrating Month of the Military Child

You can have a lot of time moving but it still comes with a price. I didn't want to move from Virginia originally because I knew I had to leave my best friends D'ja'la, Evayvier, Joshua, and Collin. I also knew I had to leave my family behind. I also ended up leaving the house and school I love. I didn't want to leave my house behind because I had a dog named Henry and he had bladder stones and surgery April 8, 2018 and that house was the house he lived in anymore.

Also remember you can have a phenomenal time moving yet also it comes with some consequences. Also I didn't let moving anger you, stress you, or make you sad. You can have a lovely time moving.

-Jeremy Morse

Sometimes I love being a military child. Most of the time when I travel, I see incredible things. I live on base now. I don't have to miss out on my family's activities. When I say family, I mean my aunts, uncles, cousins, grandmas, and grandpas. I am still amazed when I move.

Most military kids live either on base or off base. I love living on bases because most of the time you get to ride bikes or go somewhere on bases that you don't need an adult! There are guards that are keeping you safe, so you don't get hurt. One place that I like to go is to park with my friends and family. I love to live on bases!

When you move, sometimes you go to places that you can't even imagine you would go to! I went to Puerto Rico and it was BEAUTIFUL! When my family and I went there, we found out that my younger brother's name, Ispani, means arms! It's REALLY cool. I also went to Virginia and made TONS of Friends! It felt good to go to the U.S. Then I moved to Spain, and found out a lot of information about the country. I didn't know that Spain was this MAGNIFICENT!

Even though moving is cool, DEFINITELY not like missing out on family activities. Over the summer my grandmas (Nana and grandpa)Pops held a cousin camp where we go into their hot tub and have snow cones. We also get to do fun activities. It's awesome, especially when you miss out. It's not so awesome. I also HATE when I miss out on my cousins growing up. My youngest cousin is so ADORABLE and I am missing out on her birthdays. When I want to hang out with my cousins, I can't because I'm all the way across America!

Sometimes it's AMAZING to be a military child! Yet, there are some things that make you not want to be a military child. Being a military child can be rough. Like missing out on family activities. You can still have fun though, like being on base and traveling to AMAZING places! Being in the military is like a roller coaster!

-Alexis Rose

Being a military child is a different lifestyle than many other children's way of life. I get to go to many places and experience many different cultures. Still, there are difficulties; the biggest one is having to move. Even through the hardships I have a great time. It is cool to see many different cultures. Other places have unique cultures. In Spain they always say "No pasa nada", when it seems out of place. "No pasa nada" means "no big deal". For example, one time an unleashed roach was growing at me and the owner said "no pasa nada". In Guam, another place I have lived, they have a language called Chamorro. I only remember, "Mafa ada", which means hello and it is used often as a greeting. Unfortunately, their language isn't going to survive much longer. Only the oldest people know the language.

There are many different places to go and explore! One place I love is Barcelona. I have seen many buildings like Sagrada Família, Casa Mila and Park Güell. Another place I thought was amazing was Paris. We got to see the Louvre with so many paintings. The Eiffel Tower was wonderful both day and night. The pastries there are also delicious. Portugal was also cool. There were breathtaking beaches and historic cities. I have also been to Italy and Germany, and we will return to Germany over spring break!

The hardest thing for me is moving. You have to pack up almost all of your stuff. Then, you have to go on long flights that mess up your sleep system. Most, you arrive at a place where you do not know anyone. You will also have an overwhelming amount of stuff to unpack. You will need to make new friends and adjust to a new school.

Being a military child has struggles, but also a lot of benefits. There are lots of great experiences, but there are many challenges. There are many good things you get to experience, but sometimes I wish I didn't have to move so much.

-Carrie Schonefeld

DoDEA kids are quite different than regular kids and military kids. I get to see a lot of things in Europe, and it's so awesome. I also get to meet a lot of new people, which is a plus and a negative. I am always the one who has to say goodbye to my friends, because as a child of a teacher we have to stay in one place for longer periods of time. Unlike military children who move every three to four years, I will probably stay in Spain almost twelve years or until I graduate from high school. Overall, I enjoy being a DoDEA kid because it is a good experience, most of the time.

Living in a different country and continent has great positives. First I can see a lot more of the world than I would have if I was living in the states. Being in Spain I'm really close to landmarks and flights aren't too expensive. It's also easier to go on a vacation. You do not have as long of flights while exploring Europe. I have been to Spain, Portugal, Germany, Scotland, England, and more. The reason for being able to visit all these places is because they are all in close proximity to each other and my home. Another thing that makes life interesting is the different cultural experiences like Fiestas, Carnival, or any other special holiday in Spain. When hearing a different language all around me, I feel it's quite interesting what Spain has to offer.

Another place is that you get to meet a lot of people. Some come and go while some you remember. You do have to see them leave, but it was worthwhile to meet them. If you are in the states, you rarely meet new people at your school unless you leave your home area. You also learn new hobbies and find something you might love to do from meeting new people. You can learn more cultures from other people who become your friends.

One negative is seeing your friends leave. So when you stay in one place, often you see your friends leave. It's very sad to see your friends go, and it happens all the time with everyone being a military kid. You barely get to know them, and if they extend it's a little sadder when they leave. Again you also have to live in the same place for a while. You meet a lot of people who eventually leave. It's sad but you get used to it. One day I hope I don't have to do this all the time.

Being a DoDEA kid has pros and cons, from ones I listed to even more. You just have to experience it to see it all. Yes, it might seem good at first being able to live overseas or somewhere exotic, (or something) and getting to do things you wouldn't be able to see normally. In the end, if you want to make the sacrifice, you can decide, or your parents can. Probably your parents.

-Brandon Luna

Hi my name is Aliven. Having an opportunity to be a military child to me is my explanation of paradise. Even if there are many challenges of being a military child, to be specific, displacement, leaving friends, leaving your comfort zone, and many other things. But some benefits are being able to travel and learn about new cultures. But even with all of the challenges ahead of me I'm ready to take them on and still be able to enjoy my life as a military child.

I love fresh starts. I'm pretty sure everyone does. Just like moving to a new house, in a new place, meeting new friends. It's just like starting a new life. Settling in is what a military child is best at. Why? Because military children move every few years! You may think it's horrible, but it's not as bad as you think! Getting this opportunity is just like taking a vacation around the world.

Traveling around the world is like eating ice cream everyday! Like learning new cultures and trying new food is amazing! Do you think so? If not well then! Do you get to meet foreign people and see new places in my opinion? I rather do that then stay in the same place forever. That's why I love being a military child.

Do you think life as a military child is perfect? Well it's not. Leaving your friends who are close strangers, and your school that was so close to you makes you feel bad. Once you move to just a regular! You have to find a new house too! If that's your explanation of perfect, I would have to see what you call perfect!

Life as a military child has its ups and downs! But the great thing is the new experiences.

-Aliven Dedios

Being a military child is a very fun experience. I love to travel to new places and start over when I move to new places. Experiencing new cultures is so much fun! I love having storms and hot dry weather. There are a lot of fun things about being a military child but leaving my BFF is a really hard experience. After all these fun and not fun things about being a military child, it is still rather enjoyable.

As a military child it's so lucky to be able to travel. Some people don't get the chance to travel as much as we military children do. I love exploring new places and cultures. Getting a new house is so much fun, getting a new room and neighborhood! I can't imagine not having all these fun times like I do now I feel so lucky to live like this!

Some people may think weather isn't important and it's useless, but I think the exact opposite. I love new weather even though some is the same. If you were moving from Spain to Japan like me it would be such a fun experience. In Spain it is hot and so it is in Japan, that is not a big difference. Spain clearly doesn't rain that much but in Japan it has storms and typhoons all the time! When it is not stormy it is hot and dry. In my opinion weather is a very important part of moving. I still miss the extreme thunder and rain storms that we experienced in Italy.

After reading about all these good things about being a military child let's get to a bad one. A bad thing is leaving your best friends. It always feels like you'll never find someone like them when you move. It's really hard. It's really hard to find someone like them but eventually you will! You will see them just as much as your last one. It feels really hard at the beginning. It is an emotional experience but it's ok because you'll always have someone to talk to on FaceTime! I know it is a hard experience because I experienced it too but I promise it gets better.

I hope you learned about what it is like to be a military child and its ups and downs. It is fun but also very hard, this was all my opinion but you may think differently. As a restaurant traveling is a positive, the weather is a positive and leaving your best friend is a major negative. It is a very hard but but at the same time the best experience of your life.

FACES

20 years of gimmick-free cooking

America's Test Kitchen succeeds by evolving with viewers' tastes

BY LYNN ELBER
Associate Press

There are cooking shows hosted by celebrities, some of whom may know a fricassee from a frittata, and shows that feature arrogant chefs and bad cooks. There's an upcoming digital series in which blindfolded chefs get smacked in the face with a dish and compete to identify and make it.

Then there's the gimmick-free "America's Test Kitchen," in its 20th season of expertly guiding viewers through well-vetted steps for savory sauces, perfectly grilled fish and flaky pie crusts, among the 1,000-plus recipes it has demystified to date. Also on the menu are reviews of a range of ingredients, from anchovies to baking chocolate to pasta, as well as cookware.

No need to sample more than a half-dozen styles of yogurt, including Australian and Bulgarian, because "America's Test Kitchen" has done it for us. Being practical, not trendy, has its benefits: It boasts of being the longest-running U.S. cooking series. (Japan's "Today's Cooking," which debuted in 1957, has it beat internationally.)

The show's unwavering focus explains its success, said Jack Bishop, chief content officer for "America's Test Kitchen" and on-screen host of the product comparison segments.

"There's a lot of food content on television and on video platforms, especially in either the competition genre or in the travel genre," Bishop said. With the public TV series, "it's first and foremost the content and the utility of the show, that it helps people cook."

After "America's Test Kitchen" airs on PBS stations, weekend traffic surges to its website as viewers decide, "hey, I want to make that recipe," he said.

The average weekly audience is 2.25 million, holding steady and even climbing a percentage point or two in the past two years. Meanwhile, the show has expanded its reach — and appeal — online, with a YouTube subscription channel whose audience includes cooking-curious young men who hadn't discovered the series on TV, according to the America's Test Kitchen company.

The company publishes the "Cook's Illustrated" and "Cook's Country" magazines, which are ad-free like the public TV series.

The series "is public television personified. It's all about lifelong learning, being educated while entertained" and empowering viewers to develop their passion and skills, said Cynthia Fenneman, president and CEO of American Public Television, which distributes "America's Test Kitchen" to public TV stations nationwide.

Recipes are tested dozens of times by more than 50 full-time cooks who are aided by a panel of some 40,000 home cooks. The goal is to create a reliable blueprint that can be followed by viewers, with the average cost of testing for one recipe about $10,000, according to America's Test Kitchen.

It all happens in the vast, industrial-looking kitchen in Boston

KEVIN WHITT, AMERICA'S TEST KITCHEN/AP

seen on TV. Taping on this season's 26 episodes were completed before the coronavirus epidemic forced a widespread shutdown of TV and movie production.

A key ingredient for the show is the chemistry between the hosts-cooks, Bridget Lancaster and Julia Collin Davison, and the ensemble of fellow test cooks and Bishop. The vibe is friendly cooperation, not culinary one-upmanship.

"All the research we do about the shows indicates people like to just turn it on and spend time with us," Bishop said. "We actually like each other. I've done the shows since day one. I've known Bridget since 1998, Julia since 1999, and [kitchen equipment expert Adam Ried] since, I think, 1995."

Christopher Kimball, who co-founded "America's Test Kitchen" in 1980, hosted the program until a contract dispute led him and the company to part ways in 2016.

There are talking points but no scripts or prompts, Bishop said, which means that viewers are getting accomplished chefs and other experts sharing their knowledge in a relaxed way.

Perhaps the biggest change over the years can be found in the recipes themselves. When "America's Test Kitchen" launched, there was an emphasis on traditional family fare that mom or grandma made. That interest has all but evaporated, Bishop said, and people instead are choosing to re-create the dishes they enjoy when eating out.

"They want to make Thai food, Mexican food, Italian food, and do it well. So the recipe selection has really evolved over the 20 years of the show and reflects the audience tastes," he said.

Shut-in TV viewers drive up ratings for 'Let's Make a Deal'

From wire services

Instead of watching their own finances crater, shut-in television viewers tuned in to the game show "Let's Make a Deal" in record numbers last week.

TV programs across the dial recorded superlatives last week with a captive audience of millions of Americans told to stay home because of the coronavirus. Few were as interesting as the newfound fervor for CBS' "Let's Make a Deal," which recorded its most-watched week since the show was brought back 11 years ago with Wayne Brady as host, the Nielsen company said.

Cost-conscious viewers also gave "The Price Is Right," now hosted by Drew Carey, its biggest audience in four years, Nielsen said.

It was also a terrific week for television uber-producer Dick Wolf, whose Windy City-based trilogy of dramas dominates NBC's lineup. Excluding special crossover episodes, "Chicago Fire" recorded its most popular episode in six years, while "Chicago Med" and "Chicago PD" had their largest audiences in four years, Nielsen said.

The Wolf-produced dramas "FBI" and

"FBI: Most Wanted" on CBS did have a crossover last week, leading both relatively new shows to their highest ratings ever.

Nielsen hasn't computed the numbers for last week yet, but during the previous week, television usage overall was up 18 percent over the same week a year ago.

Increased usage was even more striking in Nielsen's measurements of streaming. During the week of March 16, Nielsen said that U.S. consumers streamed 156.1 billion minutes of content. That was more than double the 71.3 billion minutes streamed during the same week a year earlier, and up from the 116.4 billion minutes for the week of March 2 this year.

Twenty-nine percent of the streaming two weeks ago was Netflix programming, and 20% was YouTube, Nielsen said.

Rihanna donates $1 million to coronavirus response

Rihanna's Clara Lionel Foundation is donating $1 million in grants toward COVID-19 response — a number that is being matched by Jay-Z's Shawn Carter Foundation.

The combined $2 million will support undocumented workers, the children of front-line health workers and first responders and the incarcerated, elderly and homeless populations in New York City and Los Angeles.

Last week, the Clara Lionel Foundation donated $5 million that went to food banks, testing, healthcare worker training, virus prevention and distribution of supplies.

For the month of April, Rowling also has partnered with the audio publisher-distributor Audible and the library e-book supplier OverDrive for free audio and digital editions of the first Potter book in the series.

Rowling's British and American print publishers, Bloomsbury and Scholastic, will contribute materials to the Potter web site and to their own websites.

Virus forcing rethink of defense strategy

By MAX BOOT

The Washington Post

I have always been a strong supporter of the U.S. armed forces, because I believe they are needed to safeguard our freedom and prosperity in a dangerous world. But even hawks like me cannot be blind to the prevalence of "black swan" events in the past 20 years.

The biggest national security crises we have faced in the 21st century have been the 9/11 attacks and the subsequent wars in Afghanistan and Iraq, the 2008 financial meltdown, the 2016 Russian attack on our presidential election, global warming and now the coronavirus. There have been so many emergencies that fall outside our traditional "national security" parameters called into question whether we are spending our $738 billion defense budget on the right priorities.

The closest we came to a crisis necessitating a military response was the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001. But even then, most of the work of safeguarding the United States fell not on the military forces but to the intelligence community, the FBI, local police forces and the newly organized Department of Homeland Security. And while our armed forces could kill lots of terrorists, they could not bring lasting peace or stability to Iraq and Afghanistan. That's a nation-building mission for which our government is ill-equipped.

The 2008 financial crash had nothing to do with the military — yet, if not contained, it could easily have turned into another Great Depression that would have shaken the world order to its foundations. Global warming is an even bigger crisis, yet, it too, has no military solution. Indeed, because the Defense Department is the nation's biggest consumer of energy, using 85 million barrels of fuel in fiscal 2018, it is actually exacerbating the problem.

The 2016 Russian interference in our election may have altered the course of history by helping to elect President Donald Trump, but there is no military response to this attack, either. We are not going to drop a bomb on Vladimir Putin's head, even though he is a far bigger threat to our democracy than Iranian Maj. Gen. Qassem Soleimani was. The steps we need to take to safeguard our political system from foreign interference are outside the purview of the military, even of the U.S. Cyber Command.

Now we are battling a pandemic that by Monday had already killed more Americans than died on 9/11 — and that is expected to kill more Americans than died in all U.S. wars since 1945. The Army Corps of Engineers (whose workforce is 98% civilian) is building hospitals, the Defense Logistics Agency is buying 8,000 ventilators, the Navy is deploying two hospital ships, and the Army is sending three field hospitals — but those contributions, while valuable, will not be enough to turn the tide. By continuing to train and operate in close quarters, the armed forces may actually help spread the disease. (The aircraft carrier USS Theodore Roosevelt is having a particularly severe outbreak among its crew.) In the present crisis, as one public health expert noted, we need N95 masks, not F-35 fighter aircraft.

Even when it comes to traditional combat operations, the infrastructure of our military may be outdated. In a 2019 Foreign Affairs article, Christian Brose, a former staff director of the Senate Armed Services Committee, warned: "A military made up of small numbers of large, expensive, heavily manned, and hard-to-replace systems will not survive on future battlefields, where swarms of intelligent machines will deliver violence at a greater volume and higher velocity than ever before." That's a big problem, because we are pouring vast amounts of money into manned ships, aircraft, armored vehicles and other "legacy" systems that may be death traps on a modern battlefield against high-tech foes.

Some in the Pentagon understand that we can no longer afford business as usual. The Marine commandant, Gen. David Berger, issued a "planning guidance" last year that said: "We cannot afford to retain our global policies, doctrine, organizations or force development strategies ... What served us well yesterday may not today, and may not in the future." Berger advocates shifting the Marines' focus from the Middle East to the Pacific and from large-scale amphibious assaults to more dispersed operations by smaller units.

This is a significant departure for the Marine Corps, but it is still safe in the realm of conventional military operations. What we really need is a more radical rethink of the whole concept of "national security." It never made any sense, as Trump's 2021 budget had initially proposed, to increase spending on nuclear weapons by $7 billion while cutting Centers for Disease Control and Prevention funding by $1.2 billion. Or to create an unnecessary Space Force out of the U.S. Air Force while eliminating the vitally important directorate of global health by folding it into another office within the National Security Council.

Instead of pouring more money into the Pentagon, we need to develop new capacities to combat foreign disinformation, transition away from carbon fuels and stop the spread of pandemics. Those are more pressing priorities than a military buildup from China, Russia, Iran or North Korea, and if we don't do a better job of addressing these threats, the pain we are feeling during the coronavirus outbreak may augur even greater catastrophes to come.

High court can't halt its time-sensitive work

By ASHWIN PHATAK

Special to The Washington Post

The Supreme Court was scheduled to hear blockbuster arguments in three cases this week concerning efforts to obtain President Donald Trump's financial records, but because of the coronavirus pandemic, the court canceled these arguments for the time being. That was understandable. What's less understandable is if the court delays resolution of these cases beyond the end of this term in June.

Two of the cases concern a set of congressional subpoenas for various financial records concerning Trump, his family and his businesses. The House sought these documents as part of its investigation into whether new legislation is necessary on a variety of issues — from presidential conflicts of interest to questionable banking practices to foreign interference in our elections. Trump has challenged these subpoenas.

Importantly, these subpoenas are extraordinarily time-sensitive. Congressional terms are two years long, and the current term is already more than halfway over. Once the term ends, any subpoenas that Congress has issued will expire, and Congress will have to start its investigations from scratch with new subpoenas. Thus, Congress needs this information immediately to determine whether the information it has requested leads it to believe that legislation is necessary in any of these areas. Indeed, even if the court rules in favor of the House subpoenas by June, that will leave precious little time for Congress to consider these documents and determine whether to pass legislation before a new session of Congress begins in January.

The third case that would have been argued this week is Trump v. Vance, which concerns a grand jury subpoena for Trump's tax returns and other financial documents as part of an ongoing criminal investigation. The president used to block that subpoena as well, and this case is also urgent. The grand jury issued this subpoena in August, and its investigation would be incomplete without the requested documents, yet it is now almost April and it hasn't received them.

In short, these cases must be decided quickly to ensure that Trump is not able to run out the clock and that Congress and the grand jury receive the documents they need to conduct time-sensitive investigations. Supreme Court precedent is against Trump in both cases, yet if the court does not resolve these cases in a timely manner, that would, as a practical matter, amount to a victory for Trump. So what is the court to do? Fortunately, it has options.

First, the court could reschedule arguments for later May, when the public health risk may be lower, and still decide the cases by June. Though this schedule will leave little time between argument and a decision, the compressed timeline is not unprecedented. For instance, in United States v. Nixon, also a case about a president's compliance with subpoenas, the court heard argument on July 8, 1974, and decided the case just two weeks later on July 24.

Second, even if the court reschedules arguments for later May, the justices should be prepared to hold argument by audio and video conference if they determine that in-person argument is still unsafe. This approach has downsides: Oral argument at the Supreme Court is often a boisterous and involves frequent questioning of the advocates, and that will be more difficult electronically. Yet numerous courts of appeals have managed to hold arguments electronically during these challenging times, so the court should simply decide these cases on the papers without argument. To be sure, oral argument is important, and this approach would prevent the justices from pressing the advocates on their arguments. But there has been extensive briefing in the cases, both from the parties themselves and dozens of "friend of the court" amicus briefs. Moreover, the court does sometimes issue decisions in cases without holding oral argument, even if generally not in blockbuster cases like these.

Although none of the above options is ideal, any of them would be preferable to delaying these cases indefinitely. Thus, the court should announce which of these options, or which combination of options, it will adopt, and it should make this announcement soon. That way, the public will understand the path forward and will know that the court will not allow the president to remain above the law.

Tornado slams Ala. town amid quarantine

By JAY REEVES
Associated Press

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — An apparent tornado slammed into an Alabama neighborhood, shattering more than a dozen homes Tuesday while people were hunkered down inside because of the coronavirus outbreak, as storms caused damage from Mississippi to Georgia.

Near the Alabama-Georgia line in Eufaula, a midday twister pulled the roofs off homes in a neighborhood near the Country Club of Alabama. The area was left littered with pieces of about 15 houses and trees, but Mayor Jack Tibbs said only one minor injury was reported.

"I was really expecting it to be worse with the coronavirus with people at home, but it wasn't," Tibbs said in a telephone interview.

Tibbs said there was "no doubt" a twister was to blame based on the severity of the damage, and forecasters said photos and radar showed a tornado in the area at the time.

The National Weather Service reported "considerable" damage several hours earlier in George County, Miss., where emergency management director Nancy Smith said trees hit at least two rural homes but there were no immediate reports of injuries.

"The dispatchers are still busy answering all the calls coming in," she said. Utility crews were out working to replace broken power poles within hours.

Multiple trees were down across central Alabama, including Birmingham's southern suburbs. A barn was destroyed in rural east Alabama, the weather service reported, and video showed debris swirling around a tornado on the ground near the city airport in Troy.

More than 50,000 homes and businesses were without electricity in Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi, where the weather service said winds up to 60 mph were possible. Scattered damage extended as far south as northern Florida.

No damage was reported from waterspouts spotted over Mobile Bay and Choctawhatchee Bay in Florida.

Forecasters issued a series of tornado warnings and a tornado watch as storms moved eastward toward the Atlanta area. No injuries or touchdowns were confirmed, but the weather service said the threat was expected to continue through the afternoon.

Temperatures were expected to fall into the mid-40s overnight after storms passed, the weather service said.

Census Day arrives with US almost paralyzed by virus

By MIKE SCHNEIDER
Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — Census Day — the date used to reference where a person lives for the once-a-decade count — arrived Wednesday with a nation almost paralyzed by the spread of the novel coronavirus. But census officials vowed the job would be completed by its year-end deadline.

The virus's spread has forced the U.S. Census Bureau to suspend field operations for a month, from mid-March to mid-April, when the hiring process would be ramping up for up to 500,000 temporary census takers. The bureau also has delayed the start of counts for the homeless and people living in group quarters like college dorms and nursing homes, and has pushed back the deadline for wrapping up the head count from the end of July to mid-August.

The Census Bureau is required by federal statute to send the president the counts that will be used to carve up congressional districts — a process known as apportionment — and draw state legislative districts by Dec. 31. Some groups are suggesting that the deadline be pushed back, though it's currently mandated by federal law.

"We are laser-focused on the statute's Dec. 31 deadline for apportionment counts and population counts. We will continue to assess all of our operations to see if there are any changes that need to be made," Michael Cook, chief of the Public Information Office at the U.S. Census Bureau, said Tuesday.

The head count started in late January in rural, native villages in Alaska, but the rest of the country wasn't able to start answering the questionnaire until the second week of March when the Census Bureau's self-response website went live and people received notices in the mail that they could start answering the questions. But that was only a week before many governors and mayors started issuing stay-at-home orders to slow the virus's spread, greatly hindering in-person rallies, meetings and door-knocking by activists to raise awareness about the 2020 census.

The U.S. Census Bureau is spending $500 million on outreach efforts, including advertising, and it's relying on more than 300,000 nonprofits, businesses, local governments and civic groups to encourage participation in their communities. Those efforts have been hamstrung by the nationwide shutdown.

Most of the census takers won't be sent out until late May to knock on the doors of homes where people haven't yet answered the questions online, by telephone or by mailing back a paper questionnaire. Until then, the Census Bureau is pushing people to answer the questions so they won't have anyone knocking on their doors in late spring and summer.

As of Monday, more than 36% of households had already answered the questions, and the Census Bureau reported this week that 40,300 temporary workers were on the payroll as of mid-March.

The 2020 census will help determine how many congressional seats and Electoral College votes each state gets, as well as the distribution of some $1.5 trillion in federal spending.

Watchdog finds new problems with FBI wiretap applications

By ERIC TUCKER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department inspector general found additional failures in the FBI's handling of a secretive surveillance program that came under scrutiny after the Russia investigation, identifying problems with dozens of applications for wiretaps in national security investigations.

The audit results, announced Tuesday by Inspector General Michael Horowitz, suggest that FBI errors while eavesdropping on suspected spies and terrorists extend far beyond those made during the investigation into ties between Russia and the 2016 Trump campaign.

The new findings are on top of problems identified last year by the watchdog office, which concluded that the FBI had made significant errors and omissions in applications to eavesdrop on former Trump campaign adviser Carter Page during the early months of the Russia investigation. Those mistakes prompted internal changes within the FBI and spurred a congressional debate over whether the bureau's surveillance tools should be reined in.

After the Russia report was submitted last December, Horowitz announced a broader audit of the FBI's spy powers and the accuracy of its applications before the secretive Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court.

The watchdog office selected for review a subset of applications in both counterterrorism and counterintelligence investigations covering the period from October 2014 to September 2019. It found problems in each of the more than two dozen applications it reviewed, including "apparent errors or inadequately supported facts."

The audit examined how well the FBI was complying with internal rules that require agents to maintain a file of supporting documentation for every factual assertion they make in an application. Those rules, or "Woods Procedures," were developed in 2001 with a goal of minimizing errors in the surveillance applications, known by the acronym FISAs.

Horowitz said in a letter to FBI Director Chris Wray that in four of the 29 FISAs applications his office selected for review, the FBI could not locate any of the supporting documentation that was supposed to have been produced at the time the application was submitted.

Each of the 25 other applications it reviewed contained "apparent errors or inadequately supported facts," the inspector general said.

The watchdog office said it found an average of about 20 issues per application, including one application with about 65 issues.

As a result, Horowitz wrote, "we do not have confidence that the FBI has executed its Woods Procedures in compliance with FBI policy, or that the process is working as it was intended to help achieve the 'scrupulously accurate' standard for FISA applications."

The office recommended that the FBI "perform a physical inventory" to ensure supporting documentation exists for every application in all pending investigations. It also recommended that the FBI examine the results of "past and future accuracy reviews" so that it can identify trends and patterns and develop better training for agents.

The FBI and Justice Department say they have begun making significant changes, including additional training and other safeguards meant to ensure the accuracy of surveillance applications.

Biden casts doubt on Democratic convention date

By MATT VISER
The Washington Post

Joe Biden raised significant doubts about whether the Democratic National Convention will be held as planned in July, with the likely presidential nominee suggesting that the party's major gathering, slated for Milwaukee, may need to be altered or postponed.

When asked whether he could envision holding the convention in July, given the concerns about large gatherings in the midst of the coronavirus pandemic, Biden said, "It's hard to envision that."

"We should listen to the scientists," the former vice president told Brian Williams in an interview that aired late Tuesday night on MSNBC.

Biden noted that one reason the convention has been scheduled for mid-July was to accommodate the Olympics, which had been scheduled to begin July 24. Given that the Summer Games have been postponed to next year, Biden raised the possibility that the DNC could postpone the convention, saying, "there is more time now."

The Republican convention is scheduled for August in Charlotte.

"We ought to be able to do what we were able to do in the middle of the Civil War all the way through to World War II — have Democratic and Republican conventions and primaries and elections, and still have public safety," Biden said. "We're able to do both."

Biden also made the case that the November election may be different from any other before it, and he called on states to begin preparing now for more absentee ballots. He also said that secretaries of state throughout the nation needed to consider a virtual election, with secure remote voting.

"They should be doing that now, planning on it," he added. "This is about making sure that we're able to conduct our democracy while we're dealing with a pandemic. We can do both. It may mean a difference in the way we do it. It may mean that social distancing doesn't get it done. It may mean that you have a circumstance where you have drive-in voting, literally. You pull up and have — there's a lot of ways to do it. But we should be talking about it now."

During the interview, Biden also again appealed to supporters of Sen. Bernie Sanders, I-Vt., but he refrained from calling on his last remaining rival for the Democratic nomination to leave the race.

"Bernie has a lot of very, very strong and ardent followers. And I think it's a hard decision," Biden said. "I'm not going to tell him to stay in or get out, that's his decision. But I feel confident about being the nominee, I don't see much that's going to change that."

Biden said that he would form a group within his campaign to start doing background checks on potential running mates within the next two weeks. He said that the list would be somewhere between six and 10 candidates, and he suggested among them could be Gov. Gretchen Whitmer, D-Mich. Biden has said that he will choose a woman as a running mate.

When asked whether, given her leadership in response to the coronavirus outbreak in her state, he was lengthening his list of people to consider, Biden responded: "She hasn't lengthened the list. She made the list, in my mind, two months ago."

Biden also continued to criticize President Donald Trump for his handling of the global pandemic, saying that he should have done more and sooner. Biden said that if he were in charge, he would appoint one person to lead the administration's response.

"This is a war. You need a general. Put somebody in charge," he said.

Trump allies warn against feud with swing state governor

By STEVE PEOPLES
AND DAVID EGGERT
Associated Press

LANSING, Mich. — President Donald Trump's allies are trying to contain a politically risky election year fight with Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer as he struggles to balance presidential politics with a global pandemic in one of the nation's most important swing states.

Both sides have tried to de-escalate the feud this week, although Trump's supporters in particular sought to downplay tensions that ratcheted up over the weekend when the Republican president unleashed a social media broadside against Whitmer, a Democrat who had been critical of the federal government's response to the coronavirus outbreak. Trump has clashed with other Democratic governors as well, but he saved his most aggressive insults for the first-term female governor, who is considered a leading vice presidential prospect for his opponent.

"Everyone should be shedding the partisanship and coming together," Republican National Committee Chairwoman Ronna McDaniel said in an interview when asked about Trump's attacks, suggesting that some of his criticism had been mischaracterized.

"I am rooting for Gov. Whitmer," said McDaniel, who lives in Michigan. "I think she's done good things ... I just didn't like her trying to lay every problem at the president's feet."

The backpedaling underscores the nature of the dispute, which comes seven months before Election Day in a state that could make or break Trump's reelection bid. Michigan is an elite presidential battleground that has historically celebrated bipartisanship and pragmatism while rewarding candidates who rally behind key institutions in crisis. Four years ago, Trump eked out a win by about 11,000 votes out of more than 4.5 million cast in the state.

Mitt Romney, the 2012 Republican presidential nominee and McDaniel's uncle, lost his home state of Michigan in 2012 after opposing federal efforts to rescue the automotive industry. And Trump, by unleashing a personal attack against the state's governor in the midst of a pandemic, has sparked new fears that he, too, may be hurting himself and his party on the eve of the next election.

Michigan Rep. Paul Mitchell, a Republican, said that he raised concerns about Trump's political attack with the administration directly.

"I did relay to the administration that I didn't think it was helpful and why play that game," Mitchell said in an interview. "These are times when the American people look for leaders. Leaders don't whine. Leaders don't blame."

He said that he raised similar concerns with Whitmer's office, suggesting that her criticisms about the federal response have not necessarily been accurate.

"This is not the time where we need more drama in this country," Mitchell said.

Police: Couple accused of abducting man

LA SHREVEPORT — Authorities arrested a Louisiana couple accused of kidnapping a man from a hotel early Sunday, according to police.

Shreveport police charged Wilbert Vanzant and Kayla Owen with aggravated kidnapping, the department said in a statement obtained by news outlets.

The two 29-year-olds were accused of abducting Stephen Hatcher, 36, from a hotel around 1 a.m.

Hatcher told authorities he was bound, beaten and forced to withdraw money from an ATM, according to the statement.

Hatcher escaped and reported the kidnapping to deputies in DeSoto Parish, police said.

Electronics sniffing K-9 assists in porn arrest

FL PENSACOLA — A K-9 capable of detecting electronic storage devices assisted Florida Department of Law Enforcement agents in finding 30 images of child pornography.

FDLE agents arrested Jason Andrew Winn, 41, last week in Pensacola on 30 counts of possession of obscene material and one count of promoting sexual performance of a child, the Pensacola News Journal reported.

Police in Texas learned that obscene material had been downloaded by a computer with an IP address linked to a Pensacola residence, according to an arrest report. The agency told authorities in Florida, where officials said the address was tied to Winn's internet account.

Using a search warrant, officials found pornographic images depicting children on a laptop. An FDLE K-9 named Maple alerted agents to a box in a closet, where agents found a Parascord bracelet with a USB drive hidden inside, which contained additional images of child pornography.

Town's neighborhood 'safari' created for kids

KY LEXINGTON — A Kentucky town launched a neighborhood "safari" for children during the coronavirus pandemic by displaying stuffed animals in the windows of their homes.

The "Cumberland Hill Zoo Walk" was kicked off Sunday morning in Lexington after 60 houses in the community signed up, WKYT-TV reported.

"I have challenged kids to have a zoologist notebook and then go around and record the animal sightings," said Marian Guinn, the organizer of the zoo walk.

Throughout the week, families in the Cumberland Hill neighborhood will look for animals and submit their findings for a chance to win different prizes.

HI WAINIHA — An unidentified man took a backhoe to a taro patch in northern Kauai, damaging a staple of the traditional Hawaiian diet, a local food supply and an attached water line affecting water service in the region, authorities said.

No citations or arrests have been made yet, and water service has since been restored, police said. Witnesses told police they

Officials see 57 goats in mountain range

WA SPOKANE — Idaho biologists counted 57 mountain goats in the Selkirk Mountain Range this year, the first survey of the animals in the range since 2001.

The Idaho Department of Fish and Wildlife made an aerial observation of the goats that head to steep and bare, rocky areas in the winter. The Spokesman-Review reported. The mountain range runs along the Idaho and Washington state border, extending north into British Columbia.

The biologists counted 34 goats in 2001. In 2019, Idaho updated hunting guidelines to help manage the mountain goat population.

Teams having to adjust to new normal

By ARNIE STAPLETON
Associated Press

AURORA, Colo. — Let's go to the tape. NFL teams are having to rely more heavily on game film of college prospects as they prepare for the draft at a time when the COVID-19 pandemic has halted business as usual across the globe.

The social distancing spawned by the coronavirus emergency has halted pro training days at college campuses. It's also led the league to forbid teams hosting prospects at team headquarters or from visiting them in person interviews, face-to-face meetings that are usually such an integral part of the annual evaluations that can make or break a franchise's fortunes.

"We'll just have to conclude the best we can from what we can see on the tape," Denver Broncos general manager John Elway said in a conference call Tuesday.

Broncos coach Vic Fangio said scouts and college personnel appraisers are fond of suggesting ninth-tenths of the evaluation of a player is based on what he did in college with just 10% of the grade coming off the NFL scouting combine, college pro days and/or personal interviews.

"This is the year it will really be tested," Fangio said. "It will be 90% what you see on tape, and we'll go from there."

Fangio is putting a positive spin on the situation.

"We do not have the workout times that you normally have to evaluate guys, but sometimes those workout times and that information just clouds the issue," Fangio said. "It's nice to know that a guy runs a 40 in, but how fast does he look on tape is more important."

"A lot of times you can guess how fast a guy runs generally speaking. It's more important what the tape says."

Less than an hour's drive from the Broncos' headquarters, new University of Colorado head football coach Karl Dorrell is lamenting how FaceTime has replaced face time with his players because of the shelter-in-place and stay-at-home orders that have been issued in response to the global pandemic.

While emphasizing that these measures are what's most important to protect the pan-demie, Dorrell, who left his job as the Miami Dolphins receivers coach to take over at Colorado following Mel Tucker's abrupt departure in February, said truer evaluations are made in person.

"I have a really strong philosophy on that. I think the best way to really get your best evaluation of players is really not on tape," Dorrell said. "Tape kind of gives you an idea, but from my experience, it's getting your hands on the players on the grass. That's when you know what they have. You can kind of feel their movement, their explosiveness, their lack thereof, anything that are important ingredients for you to make an assessment."

That's why he's so eager for normalcy to return, so that he can get up-close looks at the roster he inherited.

"To me it's always been best when I see it live and when I see them running around, when I see them competing against each other. Those are the best telltale signs of making your evaluation," Dorrell said.

But Dorrell said, that holds true whether it's an NFL assistant assessing college talent as he once did or a college coach checking out a high school prospect as he's doing now.

"I'd rather see the person to evaluate a person. When I was in the NFL evaluating receivers, the combine's fine, but that's a group setting and you're not really getting specific information that you need. It's going to be more of when I went back to that particular student-athlete's university and worked him out and got him on the board and we talked football and we did all these different things. That's when I got the most out of a situation like that."

A recent example he pointed to was former Colorado State receiver Preston Williams, whose off-the-field issues kept him from getting drafted last year.

Williams signed with Miami after getting bypassed in the seven-round draft and had 32 catches for 428 yards and three touchdowns before a knee injury cut short his sensational rookie season.

"He was a transfer there from Tennessee and he had a little bit of a baggage background," Dorrell said. "But when I met the kid we had a great conversation at the combine, we continued to stay in contact with each other, I continued to do my research with coaches both at Tennessee and at Colorado State."

"And you know we felt that we got a steal, to make a long story short, when we were able to pick him up as an undrafted free agent in Miami last year," Dorrell said. "If you don't dive into the information like that, you tend to miss a lot of things."

Elway's remarks for a draft unlike any other he said a radical decision Fangio made this spring is paying unexpected dividends as the team builds its draft board for the April 23-25 selection process.

Fangio didn't take his assistant coaches to the combine in Indianapolis at the end of February and instead had them work remotely all week back in Denver evaluating players at their respective positions.

"It helped us tremendously, I think," Elway said. "Vic had the coaches stay home from the combine and spend one full week on the draft so all the coaches got all of their reports in on the players in this year's draft. That was beneficial. Instead, if you had interviews with the players over the telephone or whether it be in Zoom instead of having the 30 visits that we've had."

"So, I actually feel pretty good about where we are. With the draft staying where it is, it is fine. We'll just move ahead and deal with the hand we're dealt. Like I said, I feel like we're in good shape. Obviously with some of the information we weren't able to get because of the virus, we'll get through that."

Punt: League optimistic only draft will be affected by coronavirus

FROM BACK PAGE

Contingencies are being discussed for all potential interruptions caused by the coronavirus.

As for the first expansion of the postseason field since 1990, when the NFL went from 10 qualifiers to 12, only the teams with the best record for wild-card games and NFC will get a bye under the new format; the top two teams in each conference skipped wild-card weekend in the past. The seventh seed will play No. 2, the sixth will visit No. 3 and the fifth will be at the fourth seed for wild-card games.

Three games are set for Saturday and Sunday, Jan. 9-10 — pending the NFL schedule going forward as planned; that schedule likely will be released on May 9, according to Brian Rolapp, the league's chief media and business officer, to give the NFL "flexibility."

CBS will broadcast one of the new games on Jan. 10 at approximately 4:40 p.m. EST. The game will also be available via live stream on CBS All Access. A separately produced telecast of the game tailored for a younger audience will air on Nickelodeon. NBC, its new streaming service

Peacock and Spanish-language Telemundo will broadcast the other new game on Jan. 10 at approximately 8:15 p.m. EST.

"It's definitely going to be different," Washington Redskins linebacker Thomas Davis said. "It's going to be weird. Essentially, the second team (in each conference) is being penalized for being a good football team."

"It just makes it more competitive, it adds more teams in and it allows teams that are hot late in the season like the Titans to be able to make a run — a team that might not normally be in the playoffs (is) getting that opportunity. I like it, though."

Team presidents and owners were advised of current plans for the draft on April 23-25.

Peter O'Reilly, who oversees the organization of major events such as the Super Bowl and draft, said all of the NFL's preparations have been designed to "ensure the selection process is sound." That means equitable arrangements for every team; "celebrating and welcoming" draftees to the league; fan involvement "providing an escape for our fans and perhaps allowing virtual fan access"; and as a fundraiser for people and communities affected by the pandemic.

O'Reilly stressed that social distancing will be maintained, with no more than 10 people together, remaining at least six feet apart. Anyone who is ill will be kept away.

Commissioner Roger Goodell will make the first-round selection announcements from a central hub, and the telecasts will have connectivity at the 32 teams and potentially at some players' or fans' homes.

Vincent noted that the powerful competition committee is discussing a potential one-shot extension of the time limit on a draft slot so teams can complete a trade.

O'Reilly said Las Vegas, scheduled to host the draft this year, will get consideration for 2022, the 2021 draft will be held in Cleveland.

"2022 is an option for Las Vegas," he said. "We need some time to work through that with Las Vegas and the Raiders, but that is something we are considering."

This week, Vincent sent a letter to several prospects inviting them to participate "live" in the draft.

"We hope that you will start your NFL journey with us as part of the NFL family," Vincent wrote. "At this time, we are working on the plan for draft. As you can imagine, it is a bit of a moving target with all that is going on."

"We are contemplating several options that we will be communicating to you once details are confirmed. We want to ensure that you and your family stay safe while we develop the best way to give you a great fan experience and highlight your accomplishments as you are drafted into the NFL."

In recent drafts, first-round selections were announced by Goodell. Then followed hugs involving players and Goodell — some of them comical — and photo sessions with the players wearing team ball caps or even showing off team jerseys. Often their families and friends would get involved in the celebrations.

This year, with all public events at the planned site of Las Vegas canceled and the draft set to proceed remotely, players will likely be at their homes when their names are called.

Oldest Grand Slam canceled for the first time since World War II

By HOWARD FENDRICH
Associated Press

Wimbledon was canceled on Wednesday because of the coronavirus pandemic, the first time since World War II that the oldest Grand Slam tennis tournament won't be played.

Britain imposed a nationwide lockdown just over a week ago, and the All England Club announced after a two-day emergency meeting that the event it refers to simply as The Championships is being scrapped for 2020. That hadn't happened since 1945.

Wimbledon was scheduled to be played on the club's grass courts on the outskirts of London from June 29 to July 12.

Instead, the next edition of the tournament will be June 28 to July 11, 2021.

Eight-time Wimbledon champion Roger Federer surely spoke for many with a one-word message on Twitter: "Devastated."

Also Wednesday, the ATP and WTA announced that the men's and women's professional tours would be suspended until at least July 13, bringing the number of elite tennis tournaments affected by the coronavirus to more than 30. The top tours already had been on hold through June 7. Lower-level events on the Challenger Tour and ITF World Tennis Tour also are called off through mid-July now.

Wimbledon first was held in 1877 and has been contested every year since, with the exception of two stretches: from 1915-18 because of World War I, and from 1940-45 because of World War II.

"It has weighed heavily on our minds that the staging of The Championships has only been interrupted previously by World Wars," club chairman Ian Hewitt said in a press release. "But, following thorough and extensive consideration of all scenarios, we believe that it is a measure of this global crisis that it is ultimately the right decision to cancel this year's Championships, and instead concentrate on how we can use the breadth of Wimbledon's resources to help those in our local communities and beyond."

Wimbledon joins the growing list of sports events called off completely in 2020 because of the COVID-19 outbreak.

That includes the Tokyo Olympics — which have been pushed back 12 months — and the NCAA men's and women's college basketball tournaments.

Wimbledon is the first major tennis championship wiped out this year because of the coronavirus. The start of the French Open was postponed from late May to late September.

Shortly after the news came from Wimbledon, the U.S. Tennis Association issued a statement saying it "still plans to host the U.S. Open as scheduled," from Aug. 31 to Sept. 13 in New York.

Wednesday's decision by the All England Club means Novak Djokovic and Simona Halep will not get a chance to defend their Wimbledon titles from 2019.

"We are going through something bigger than tennis and Wimbledon will be back!" Halep wrote on social media. "And it means I have even longer to look forward to defending my title."

Serena Williams retweeted the club's message about the cancellation and wrote "I'm Shooked." The move also takes away what might have been one of Federer's best chances to try to add to his men's-record 20 Grand Slam titles.

Federer, who turns 39 in August, is currently recovering from knee surgery and planned to return in time for the European grass-court circuit that now has been erased from the calendar.

Los Angeles Angels outfielder Mike Trout, above, and other veterans will receive $4,775 per day in advance pay for the first 60 days of the season. Trout would normally earn $193,548 each day.

MLB vets getting $4,775 daily

By RONALD BLUM
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Gerrit Cole, Mike Trout and other veteran major leaguers will receive $4,775 per day in advance pay for the first 60 days of the season during the stoppage caused by the new coronavirus, a total of $286,500.

That's just 2.5% of the $193,548 the New York Yankees pitcher and Los Angeles Angels outfielder were scheduled to earn each day during the 186-day season from their $36 million salaries, tied for the major league high this year.

The daily total was obtained by The Associated Press after it was confirmed by Major League Baseball and the players' association following their agreement last week on how to proceed during the stoppage.

Less veteran players receive smaller amounts specified in the agreement: $16,500, $30,000 or $60,000, depending on the contract.

MLB has delayed opening day until mid-May at the earliest, and it remains unclear when or if the season will start.

On Wednesday, the two-game series in London between the Chicago Cubs and the St. Louis Cardinals was canceled because of the coronavirus pandemic.

The teams had been scheduled to play at Olympic Stadium on June 13-14.

Under the terms of the deal, teams are combining to give $170 million in advance pay to players on 40-man rosters, injured lists and outright assignments to the minor leagues. The payments will be made in equal installments on the normal payroll schedule and do not have to be repaid if the season is scrapped. They cover from March 26, the original opening day, through May 24 or whenever the season starts, whichever is earlier.

A player receives $275 daily if his salary while in the minors is $46,000 to $91,799, a group that includes highly touted rookies such as Boston infielder Bobby Dalbec and Atlanta outfielder Cristian Pache.

Those with salaries in the minors from $91,800 to $149,999, a group that has signed at least their second big league contract, get $500 daily. Those players include well-regarded rookies such as Los Angeles Dodgers infielder Gavin Lux and Tampa Bay pitcher Brendan McKay.

Players with salaries in the minors of $150,000 or more receive $1,000 daily, including 2019 NL Rookie of the Year Pete Alonso.

NHL extends quarantine until April 15

By STEPHEN WHYNO
Associated Press

The NHL has extended its guideline for players and staff to self-quarantine until April 15 and it is possible the coronavirus pandemic could push that back even further.

Deputy Commissioner Bill Daly confirmed the extension to the Associated Press Tuesday. It adds an extra 11 days to the previous guidance of April 4, which Daly last week acknowledged was "a meaningless date" because of the rapidly changing situation.

"As we get closer to the date, we're going to have to make decisions as to what to do then," Daly said. "We're biting this off in chunks."

The NHL put its season on pause March 12 with 189 regular-season games remaining. Commissioner Gary Bettman said then he was optimistic of resuming the season and awarding the Stanley Cup.

The timeline for doing that still isn't clear. The NHL has asked teams for arena availability dates through August, so it wouldn't be inconceivable to see hockey last deep into the summer.

"Depending on how the country, the world handles the virus, I think there is a possibility of playing end of June, July, August," Washington Capitals general manager Brian MacLellan said Monday.

Several things have to happen first. President Donald Trump extended U.S. social distancing guidelines through the end of April, and the NHL said it will evaluate the situation 45 days into the CDC's eight-week recommendation against gatherings of 50-plus people that runs until mid-May.

The NHL's chief medical officer said getting players together in small groups is the first step toward potentially resuming the season. State, provincial and local lockdown regulations could affect the re-opening of team practice facilities for informal skates.

Blue Devils end the Rebels' run

Duke's 1991 NCAA semifinal upset of UNLV ended one era, began another

By JIM O'CONNELL
Associated Press

ANDIANAPOLIS second chance for Duke proved to be the last chance for UNLV. Rebounding from a 30-point loss in last year's NCAA championship game, the Blue Devils won a game they were given as much chance of winning as drawing an inside straight at the gaming tables.

They beat the top-ranked Runnin' Rebels 79-77 on Saturday to end UNLV's dream of a repeat title, an undefeated season and basketball immortality.

Christian Laettner, the only Duke player who played well in the 103-73 loss last season, made two free throws with 12.7 seconds to play to give his team its final margin.

The Runnin' Rebels came down court with one final chance at keeping their dreams alive, but Anderson Hunt's three-pointer with 2 seconds to play bounced off the rim.

Hunt was hugged by his UNLV teammates. The Blue Devils' players celebrated. And UCLA stayed the last school to repeat in 1973, and Indiana in 1976 remained the last unbeaten champion.

The Runnin' Rebels' 45 game winning streak — the fourth-longest in Division I history — was ended two games short of where they had hoped. Duke will play Kansas, a 79-73 winner over North Carolina, in Monday night's championship game.

"It was one of the really great basketball games," Blue Devils coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "Our kids hung in there the whole time, we just happened to play defense on the last exchange."

The upset by Duke must have been especially sweet to two coaches — Krzyzewski, of course, and Indiana coach Bob Knight, his mentor and close friend who led the Hoosiers to that perfect championship record in 1976.

The Blue Devils had been no stranger to the Final Four, making a fourth consecutive appearance, fifth in six years, and ninth overall. They had reached the title game four other times, never leaving with a trophy, and now they would get a chance to walk off the court with one on Monday night.

Laettner finished with 28 points and it was his yeoman work off the boards which allowed Duke to stay in the game and hold nine leads in the second half.

UNLV (34-1) trailed in the second half this season for a total of 1 minutes, 21 seconds. Now, it will trail forever.

The Runnin' Rebels took a 76-71 lead with 2:31 to play, when George Ackles tipped in his own shot to cap a 6-0 run.

Bobby Hurley, plagued with stomach problems in last year's game in a poor performance, hit a three-pointer 15 seconds later to cut the lead to two.

UNLV was called for a 45-second shot-clock violation with 1:24 left and the Blue Devils' Brian Davis drove the baseline for a three-point play and a 77-76 Duke lead with 1:02 left.

The Hoosier Dome crowd was cheering as it hadn't expected to late in a Runnin' Rebels game. This was usually blowout time for the Rebels. Not this time, though. Stacey Augmon missed a shot for UNLV, but Larry Johnson was fouled trying to convert the rebound with 49 seconds left. He missed both free throws, but a lane violation on the Blue Devils' Thomas Hill gave him another chance at the second and he made it to tie the game.

After beating UNLV, Duke went on to defeat Kansas, giving coach Mike Krzyzewski the first of his five national titles.

Duke ran down the shot clock, settling for a drive by Hill with 15 seconds to play. The shot missed, but Laettner grabbed the rebound, was fouled and made both for the final points.

Win or lose in the title game, ending the Runnin' Rebels' winning streak will remove some of the sting of last year's rout for Krzyzewski and the returning Blue Devils players.

"We did it by not listening to anyone but Coach K and the coaching staff," Laettner said. "We went into the game thinking we could win and we went out on the floor and did it today. We had a good game plan, we played our game. And we just played really tough, really intense out there."

UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian said he hoped Johnson would get a chance at a winning three-pointer in the final seconds. Johnson brought the ball upcourt, passed to Hunt and never got the ball back.

"They played better than we did, they deserved to win, it was a great win for Duke and a tough loss for UNLV," Tarkanian said. "I just feel so bad for the kids, because they're the greatest group of kids I've ever been around. I just hurt inside for them."

Hunt finished with 29 points, the same as in last year's title game, when he was named MVP. It was the absence of his backcourt mate over the final four minutes that made a huge difference.

Greg Anthony drew his fifth personal foul with 3:51 left when he was called for a charge. The basket was disallowed, and the Runnin' Rebels had lost their point guard and defensive specialist for crunch time.

It made a difference. UNLV had the shot-clock violation and failed to move the ball as crisply as usual in the final minutes.

"When Greg was out of there, we were a little out of sync," Tarkanian said.

The Blue Devils trailed 43-41 at halftime, another improvement from last season when they were down 47-35 at intermission.

They scored the first two baskets of the second half and the lead changed hands in the second half more often than cards at the blackjack tables.

Davis finished with 15 points, and Hurley had 12 and Grant Hill 11.

Anthony had 19 points and six assists, while Johnson had 13 points and 13 rebounds.

The Runnin' Rebels finished with a 40-26 rebound advantage, but couldn't come up with one as big as Laettner's with 12.7 seconds to play.

"I expect that international games will be part of our schedule for this year," Pash added. "We're optimistic just as we expect conditions in the United States to permit playing a full season that will be the case for our international partners as well. Obviously, that's something that we'll have to work closely with the authorities, public health
